PREFACE.

THE present work consists of two portions—the Index proper and the Concordance. The Index deals mainly with the proper names occurring in the Mahābhārata. The student should therefore first look for information under such headings as are names, and not under narrative headings such as Indravijaya and the like.

The paragraph references found under the names in the Index are given sometimes alone [e.g. § 547], and sometimes with the addition of small italic letters [e.g. § 201*b*]. If there is no such addition, the paragraphs (viz. abstracts or paraphrases of the text) are themselves sections of the narrative, and given under the name in question, because the bearer of the name is the principal actor. Such paragraph references, without small italic letters, are often followed by a parenthesis. Thus, under the heading Agni, we find the quotation “§§ 254–260 (Khāṇḍavadah.)” Here the references are suggestive of a narrative which will be found in full under the heading given within parenthesis, viz. Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan, and the name in question, in this case Agni, is the name of one among several principal actors, so that it would seem arbitrary to refer the narrative to him alone.

A small italic letter after a paragraph reference and followed by a word within parenthesis is used when the name to which it is added does not connote the principal actor or the chief item of the narrative, but is only incidentally mentioned, though the reference is of interest for, and solely, or at least chiefly, concerned with it. If further information is wanted it will have to be looked for under the heading given within parenthesis, where the name in question is mentioned, the small italic letter being added within parenthesis as a kind of cross-reference.

Under Māhishmatī we thus find the quotation “§ 282*b* (Sahadeva)” followed by a remark concerning Māhishmatī. Further particulars must then be looked for under Sahadeva, where we read, “§ 282: From Kishkindhā Shd. marched towards Māhishmatī (b)”

A small Greek letter indicates that the reference is chiefly of interest on account of the connection in which it occurs, and that further information will be found under the heading referred to within parenthesis, where the same Greek letter has likewise been added, within parenthesis, as a cross-reference.

Take, for instance, the reference given under Duḥcāsana, “§ 83 (Ādivaṃcāv.) α : I, 63, 2447” (or, I, 63*a*, 2447). Similarly, we find under Duḥsaha, “§ 83 (Ādivaṃcāv.) α : I, 63, 2448.” These references show that Duḥcāsana and Duḥsaha are mentioned under the heading Ādivaṃcāvatāraṇa, and that no immediate interest attaches to their being referred to in that place. The statement made under Ādivaṃcāvatāraṇa runs, “§ 83: the 101 sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra . . . of whom 11 (α) . . . are enumerated as mahārathas.” Here the α indicates that I have not thought it worth while to enumerate those 11 names (they must accordingly be looked for in the Sanskrit texts), but the passage in question has been referred to under the headings of each of them.

To return to the quotation under Duḥcāsana, "83 (Ādivaṃcāv.) α: I, 63, 2447."

The figures 63, 2447 refer to a passage where Duḥcāsana is actually mentioned.

The small α shows that the mention of his name presumably is of little or no general importance, and may be practically neglected from a mythological or legendary point of view.

If the reader nevertheless wishes to know the purport of the reference, the word given within parenthesis shows that information will be found under Ādivaṃcāvātārāṇa, and one inspection under that heading will show that Duḥcāsana is there only mentioned, among eleven of Dhṛtarāshṭra's sons, as a mahāratha.

The heading Ādivaṃcāvātārāṇa, with or without one additional inspection of the Concordance under § 83, will at once show the reader who in his memory has a general idea of the contents of the Mahābhārata that the quotation has been taken from a kind of preface or introduction to the principal narrative of the Epos, which is placed after the sections where, not Vaiṣampāyana, but Sauti is the speaker. According to his critical disposition he will, or will not, draw conclusions from this fact.

Mere comparisons have been marked by the addition of (iva) or the like.

The signs *, , †, (†), ††, and (††) have a critical value. I have not, of course, allowed the book to be influenced by critical theories. I have only intended to draw attention to such facts as seem to be of critical importance. According to his disposition, the reader may or may not draw conclusions from those signs. The danger is that they may sometimes have been omitted through inadvertence.

The numbers of verses, in ordinary type, refer to the Calcutta edition; the numbers of chapters, in clarendon type, to the Bombay text. By using the Concordance it will be possible, with very little uncertainty, to calculate what verse in the Bombay edition corresponds to a given one in the Calcutta Mahābhārata.

The books are quoted in Roman numbers.

The enumeration of verses is, except where the heading is marked by an asterisk, intended to be complete, and I hope that it is so, at least with regard to all instances where there cannot be any doubt that the heading occurs as a name. In such cases, on the other hand, where it may have been a matter of subjective feeling during the reading whether a word should be considered as a proper name or as a mere laudatory epithet, I fear that there may be some incompleteness and inconsistency. Thus some synonyms of Agni and Arjuna, which will be found in Mr. Holtzmann's lists, have not been registered.

There are also some other inconsistencies, sometimes voluntary, for the sake of convenience, sometimes involuntary, due to the fact that my work has extended over a very great span of time. These latter ones are faults for which I must ask indulgence, but I hope that they will not cause any serious misunderstanding or inconvenience. I do not now venture to correct them, lest the numerous cross-references should be imperilled.

The numerous synonyms, such as Kiritin for Arjuna, have, as a rule, been put together under the principal name; e.g. Kiritin, etc., under Arjuna. Such denominations as Kaurava, Kuruçreshtha, etc., have, however, been given separately in their proper places, the principal aim to be held in view with regard to them clearly being to be able to know easily what person is meant in each instance.

In the case of such synonyms, and of articles the contents of which are unimportant, I have only quoted book and verse. In other cases I have usually also added reference to paragraph and chapter. Take, for instance, under the heading Arjuna, the quotation § 613 (Gadāyuddh.), IX, 32-33: 33, 1890, 1921. Here the explanatory addition (Gadāyuddh.) refers the reader to the heading Gadāyuddhaparvan, where a summary of the narrative in question will be found under Book ix, chapters 32-33. The quotation 33, 1890, 1921 indicates the places where the name Arjuna actually occurs.

In some cases the summary of the narrative has also, for the sake of convenience, been repeated, in a more or less abridged form, under the special heading; thus, in our present case, under Arjuna.

In these, probably not very numerous, cases the reference to the paragraph is only necessary in order to get an idea of the wider connection in which the quotation occurs. In other instances the exposition must almost entirely be looked for in the paragraph quoted. Thus in the case of the quotation §§ 254-260 (Khāṇḍavadah.), I, 222-234, under the heading Arjuna. Here the narrative will be found in §§ 254-260 under the heading Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan. By referring to the Concordance, under the same paragraphs, the place which the narrative occupies in the epic as a whole will immediately be seen.

By arranging in numerical order, i.e. in the order of the Concordance, the paragraphs as given in the Index, we should obtain a synopsis of the contents of the whole epic, in the order of the original. Essentially the same result may be obtained from the article Arjuna, where I have introduced more repetitions (i.e. statements which are also found under other headings) than in any other article.

With regard to repetitions, I have thought it more important to enable the reader to use the Index conveniently and without unnecessary waste of time, than to save space. I have not, therefore, strictly avoided them in the principal articles, though I have done so in most cases by referring to paragraph articles and to the headings under which the quotations concerned are first given.

The text on which the Index is based is, on the whole, the Calcutta edition. Readings from other sources (i.e. almost exclusively the Bombay edition) have only been noticed for special reasons.

In transliterating the Sanskrit words, it will be noticed that I have followed the order of the Latin alphabet, without paying any attention to diacritical marks. I have adopted the usual system of transliteration, with some modifications. Thus the palatal mute is given as c, ch being reserved for the corresponding aspirate; j is the palatal media, and y the corresponding semi-vowel. The palatal and cerebral s-sounds have been transliterated ç and ś respectively.

The only exception from the strict adherence to the arrangement in accordance with the Latin alphabet is that the letters ç and ś have been treated as separate letters and placed after c and r respectively. This has been done because these sounds are often transliterated as ś and ç respectively.

IN THE CONCORDANCE it will be noticed that the mutual relationship between the two divisions in paragraphs and chapters has been indicated in various ways. My principal aim has here been to save space and trouble.

Where the paragraphs are separated from the synopsis of chapters and verses, the headings to which they belong in the Index have simply been printed after the other indications relating to them. E.g., § 19 (giving the contents of Mhbhr. I, 5, 1–11) will be found under the heading 'BERGU.' Where the paragraphs are not so separated, it should be generally understood that the title of the minor parvan to which a paragraph belongs is also the heading under which it will be found in the Index. E.g., § 249 (Mhbhr. I, 215) under the heading 'ARJUNAVANAVĀSAPARVAN.' If this is not the case, the paragraphs are to be found in the Index under the titles of those chapters of the parvan in question which have been printed with spaced type. E.g., § 177 (Mhbhr. I, 113) under the heading 'PĀṆDUDIGVIJAYA,' § 161 (Mhbhr. I, 96) under the heading 'MAHĀBHISHOPĀKHYĀNA,' and not under 'SAMBHAVAPARVAN.'

My sincere thanks are due to those who have helped me with their advice or have in other ways shown their interest in my work. In this connection I beg to mention Professor V. Fausböll, Professor K. F. Geldner, Professor Ch. R. Lanman, Dr. Sten Konow, and Dr. G. A. Grierson. The valuable suggestions made by Professor Lanman have, in many respects, left material traces in the arrangement of the Index, and certainly rendered it much more convenient and useful to the student than would otherwise have been the case. My young friend Mr. Elof Olesen deserves my warmest thanks for the care and sagacity with which he has assisted me in the revision of the manuscript.

Finally, I tender my respectful thanks for the pecuniary assistance which has rendered the compilation of this work possible, viz., the very liberal support which I have received from the Carlsberg Fond at Copenhagen, and from the Danish Government and the Danish Parliament.

Abhimanyor bhāryā = Uttarā.

Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna and Subhadrā, sister of Kṛṣṇa (I, 2, 401; 63, 2449; 95, 3830; 221, 8026), is an incarnation of Varcas, son of Soma (I, 67, 2748), wherefore he enters Soma after death, after his Kurman has elapsed (XVIII, 5, 165); (false) etymology of his name (I, 221, 8027); he is the vaṃṣakara of the Pāṇḍavas (I, 95, 3834). In the beginning of the exile of the Pāṇḍavas he is carried to Dvārakā with his mother by Kṛṣṇa (III, 22, 895), where he is educated and protected by Rāmkīṇeya (III, 183, 12584 and 12586; cf. 235, 14733). After the elapse of the exile he joins the Pāṇḍavas in Upaplavya with Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā (IV, 72, 2358, cf. 2350), and is there married to Uttarā, daughter of king Virāṭa (I, 2, 489; IV, 72, 2355; V, 1). He fights bravely in the great battle, until he on the 13th day, when enjoined by Yudhisṭhira to break Droṇa's cakravyūha (VII, 35, 1519), is surrounded and killed by Jayadratha and his people, leaving his wife Uttarā with a yet unborn son, Parikṣhit, the only one left to propagate the race of the Pāṇḍavas. At first he is not seen in Heaven by Yudhisṭhira (XVIII, 1, 26), but later he is shown to him beside Soma in Heaven (XVIII, 4, 146).

§ 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 189, 190.—§ 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 328 (or Vairātyā Vairāhikam parca), 400, 469 (Saubhadram), 532-3.—§ 831 (Ādivaṃṣ.): I, 63, 2449.—§ 130g (Amṣv.): I, 67, 2748.—§ 159 (Pūruvaṃṣ.): I, 95, 3830, 3834.—§ 253 (Haranāhar.): I, 221, 8026, 8027.—§ 321 (Saubhadrap.): III, 22, 895.—§ 327 (Draupadiparit.): III, 33, 1275.—§ 402 (Tīrthayātrūp.): III, 120, 10279.—§ 452 (Mārkaṇḍeyasam.): III, 183, 12570, 12584-6.—§ 511 (Draupadi-Satyabhāmā-samv.): III, 235, 14733.—§ 553 (Vaivāhikap. 2): IV, 72, 2344, 2350, 2355, 2358.—§ 554 (Sainyody.): V, 1, 1, 5.—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 48^β, 1840; 50^η, 2010; 59, 2326.—§ 562 (Bhugavadyanap.): V, 82, 2893, 2908.—§ 569 (do.): V, 140, 4747.—§ 570 (Sainyaniryanap.): V, 151, 5144.—§ 571 (Ulūkādūt.): V, 162, 5592; 163, 5677.—§ 572 (Rathātir.): V, 170, 5880.—§ 573 (Ambop.): V, 194, 7601.—(a) 1st day of the battle: V, 196^θ, 7629 (in the 1st detachment of Yudhisṭhira's army), 7635 (c).—§ 578 (Bhishmavadhap.): VI, 45², 1683 (fights Brhadbala); 47^c, 1814 (attacks Bhishma; steeds of tawny hue were yoked to his car; his standard was adorned with pure gold and resembled a karnikāra tree); 48^c, 1963 (assists Çveta against Bhishma), 1970.—(b) 2nd day of the battle: VI, 50^π, 2082 (placed in the wings of Dhṛṣṭadyumna's krauñcavyūha).—§ 579 (do.): VI, 52^a, 2150 (assists Arjuna against Bhishma); 55¹⁷, 2368 (fights Lakṣmaṇa).—(c) 3rd day: § 580 (do.): VI, 56^θ, 2418 (is placed in the midst of Arjuna's ardhaçandrayūha); 58⁴, 2468 (figs. the Gāndhāras), 2470 (receives Sātyaki in his chariot).—(d) 4th day: § 581 (do.): VI, 60, 2673 (assists his father against Bhishma); 62², 2728 (attacks Çalya), 2733, 2744; 63⁴, 2789 (assists Bhīmasena); 64¹³, 2833, 2854 (assists Bhīmasena against Bhagadatta).—(e) 5th day:

Abhimanyuvadha(h) ("the slaughter of Abhimanyu"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2 (339: °aḥ parva) = Abhimanyuvadhaparvan.

[Abhimanyuvadhaparvan(va)] ("the section including the slaughter of Abhimanyu," the 73rd of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Abhimanyuvadha). § 593: The 13th day: Broken by Arjuna, and Droṇa having failed to seize Yudhishtira, the Kurus were regarded as defeated; they heard all praising Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Next morning Duryodhana blamed Droṇa for not having seized Yudhishtira; Droṇa said that even D., As., G., Y., N., and Rā. cannot defeat the force protected by Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, save Mahādeva; but to-day he would slay a mighty car-warrior. The Samçaptakas challenged Arjuna and took him away to the southern side of the field. Abhimanyu's slaughter by Duḥçāsana's son is alluded to by Sañjaya. Dhṛtarāṣṭra grieves. Sañjaya relates (VII, 33). Sañjaya praises Yudhishtira, etc. (a). Droṇa had formed the great circular array (çakravyūha): Lakshmana (the grandson of Dhṛtarāṣṭra) at their head; Duryodhana, etc. (β) in the middle; at the head the commander Droṇa, etc. (γ) (VII, 34). The Pāṇḍavas were headed by Bhīmasena: Sātyaki, etc. (δ) & Droṇa, whom the Pāṇḍavas and the Sñjayas could not approach. Yudhishtira says that only Abhimanyu, etc. (ε), can break the array of Droṇa, and orders Abhimanyu to do it; Bhīma, etc. (ζ) followed him; praised by Yudhishtira, who says that the protectors of Droṇa's host resemble S., R., M., V., or Agni, or Aditya, Abhimanyu orders his charioteer Sumitra to urge the steeds towards Droṇa's army (VII, 35). Abhimanyu (with Sumitra), etc., & Droṇa, etc.; Abhimanyu breaks that part of the Kuru army; many steeds of the Pāṇḍu, etc. (η), breeds were deprived of their ornaments, and caused delight to Rā., etc. (VII, 36). Duryodhana & Abhimanyu; Droṇa, etc. (θ) & Abhimanyu rescuing Duryodhana; Duḥçāsa etc. (i), & Abhimanyu, who slew the heir of Āçmaka Karṇa, etc. (κ), & Abhimanyu, who slew Suśeṇa, etc. (λ), and defeated Çalya; Droṇa's troops fled; P., D., Cā., Si., etc., glorify Abhimanyu (VII, 37). Abhimanyu slays Çalya's younger brother, whose followers fled. Abhimanyu, with the weapons he has received from Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, defeats all the warriors that encounter him. Droṇa's army fled (VII, 38). Abhimanyu & Droṇa, etc. (μ). Droṇa says that Abhimanyu delights Yudhishtira, etc. (ν). Duryodhana told Karṇa, etc. (ξ), to crush Abhimanyu, whom they attacked; Duḥçāsana & Abhimanyu (VII, 39); Abhimanyu addresses Duḥçāsana (mentioning the dice, etc.); Duḥçāsana is borne away by his charioteer; the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ο), uttered leonine shouts, and attacked Droṇa's array. Karṇa (urged by Duryodhana) & Abhimanyu (desirous of proceeding towards Droṇa); when Karṇa is in great distress his younger brother encounters Abhimanyu (VII, 40) Abhimanyu slays Karṇa's younger brother; Karṇa flies; the Kaurava array breaks, except the Sindhu-king (VII, 41). Yudhishtira, etc. (π), endeavour to follow Abhimanyu. Jayadratha checks them with celestial weapons. Dhṛtarāṣṭra enquires of Sañjaya about the source of Jayadratha's energy; Sañjaya narrates the boon obtained by Jayadratha from Çiva (VII, 42). Jayadratha vanquishes all the Pāṇḍava leaders with his steeds of the Sindhu-breed: Sātyaki, etc. (ρ); Bhīma mounts the car of Sātyaki; the path made by Abhimanyu is closed 'up, notwithstanding the Matsyas, etc. (σ); they are all checked by Jayadratha (VII, 43). Abhimanyu vanquished Vṛshasena, who was borne away from the battle, and slew Vasāṭiya and many others (VII, 44). Abhimanyu seized Satyacraṇas and routed the Kurus; Rukmaratha (the son of Çalya) & Abhimanyu, who slew him and his friends (100 princes) with the Gāndhāra-weapon (δ), though they were assisted by Duryodhana, who was filled with fear and fled (VII, 45). Droṇa, etc. (τ), & Abhimanyu, who beats them back except Lakṣmaṇa (who is followed by Duryodhana), who is slain. Duryodhana urged the troops to slay Abhimanyu; Droṇa, etc. (υ), encompassed Abhimanyu, who seeks Jayadratha; Kṛāthā's son was slain, the others fled (VII, 46). Droṇa, etc. (φ), & Abhimanyu + Yudhishtira supporting Jayadratha; Karna has one ear cut off; Abhimanyu slew Vṛndāraka and Brhdbala (VII, 47); Abhimanyu once more pierced Karna in the ear, and slew the son of the Magadha-king, and Açvakesu, and the Bhoja prince of Mārtikāvata (bearing the device of an elephant); the son of Duḥçāsana & Abhimanyu; Açratthāman & do.; Abhimanyu & Çalya, who mounts another car; Abhimanyu slew Çatruñjaya, etc. (χ); Abhimanyu & Çakuni, who tells Duryodhana to take counsel with Droṇa and Kṛpa, etc., about the means of slaying Abhimanyu; Karna asks Droṇa about the means of slaying Abhimanyu; Droṇa, saying that he is gratified by Abhimanyu's prowess, tells Karna, who is very afflicted with arrows, to cut off his bow, etc. Karna then cut off Abhimanyu's bow, Kṛtavarma slew his steeds, and Kṛpa slew his two Pāraṇi charioteers; Abhimanyu, then attacked by six car-warriors, fights with the sword, which is cut off by Droṇa, while Karna cut off his shield (VII, 48); then Abhimanyu fought with a wheel; then with a mace; Abhimanyu & Açvathāman; Abhimanyu slew (? apothayāt) Subala's son Kūlikeya, and slew 77 Gāndhāra followers of his, and 10 Brahma-Vasāṭiyas (punar Brahma-Vasāṭiyan, C.; B. has punaç caiva Vasāṭiyan), 7 Kaikayas (Kaikayānaṃ, C.; B. has Kekayānām), and 10 elephants; Abhimanyu & Duḥçāsana's son, who slays Abhimanyu. Invisible creatures censure the cowardly act of the Kurus headed by Droṇa and Karna. The Pāṇḍava divisions fly, but are rallied by Yudhishtira (VII, 49). In the evening the Kurus withdrew to their encampment. Rā. and Pç., etc., on the field of battle (VII, 50). Yudhishtira laments on the fall of Abhimanyu (VII, 51).—§ 594: Vyāsa comes and consoles him ("death takes all: D., Dū., G., without exception"), relating to him the ancient story of what Nārada had said in days of old to Akampaṇa (q.v.). "This story is purifying, etc.; cast off thy grief; Abhimanyu has attained to heaven; sprung from Soma, he has disappeared in the lunar essence, cleansed from all his impurities" (VII, 54).—§ 595: Vyāsa recites to Yudhishtira the story of Sṛjaya (q.v.), to whom Nārada told Shoḍaçarājika (VII, 55-70). Vyāsa says that Abhimanyu has attained to that eternal goal which is attained by Yogins, and those that are living in heaven never prefer this world to heaven; "it is the living that stand in need of our grief, and not those who have attained to heaven; his sins increase for whom the living grieve." Then Vyāsa disappeared, and Yudhishtira became free from grief; but—"what shall we say to Arjuna?" (VII, 71).

Abhira, a people in the west of India upon the Indus (II, 32, 1192: Çādra) (Digvijaya.); are conquered by Nakula at his Digvijaya (ib.); bring tribute to Yudhishtira (II, 51, 1832) (Dyūtap.). Mārkaṇḍeya prophesies that in the Kali-yuga there shall be many Abhira and other barbarous kings (III, 188, 12840) (Mārkaṇḍeya). The *Abhira*s are mentioned by Saṅjaya in the enumeration of the people of Bhāratavarsha, VI, 9, 354, 375 (Çādra) (Jambūkh.) (cf. Wilson, Vishnu-purāṇa, ed. by Fitzedward Hall, vol. ii, 133 f., 167 f., 184 f.). They are placed in the eyes of Droṇa's Suparnavyūha on the twelfth day of the battle, VII, 20, 798 (çādra) (Samçaptakavadhap.). From hatred towards them the Sarasvatī disappeared at Vinaçana, IX, 37, 2119 (çādra) (Baladevat.). They have become çūdras, having omitted their duties of kahattriyas from fear of Paraçurāma, XIV, 29γ, 832 (Draviḍa) (v. Arjuna Kārtavīrya). When Arjuna, after the catastrophe at Dvārakā, is conducting the wives, children, and the old men from thence to Indraprastha, the *Abhira*s attack him when he has arrived at Pañcanada, and rob most of the women, XVI, 7, 223; 8, 270 (Pañca-janālayaiḥ; probably an error for Pañcanadālayaiḥ, B.) (Mausalap.).

Abhirāma = Çiva (1000 names³).

Abhirāmā, v. Pūrvābhirāmā.

Abhiru, a king (rajarshisattamaḥ), who was an incarnation of the sixth of the eight Asuras of the family of the Kāloyāḥ: I, 67, 2689 (Aṃçavat., § 130).

Abhisāra, a people (cf. VP., II, 174-5; "bordering on Kashmir, to the south and west") (= Abhi). Together with other barbarous tribes they fight Arjuna on the 14th day of the great battle, VII, 93δ, 3380 (printed Dāvā-tisāra . . .) (Jayadrathavadhap.). They are mentioned by Kṛṣṇa among the auxiliaries of Duryodhana, VIII, 73, 3652 (Dāvā) (Karna), on the 17th day of the battle.

Abhisāra (= the preced.), enumerated by Saṅjaya among the people of Blāratavarsha: VI, 9, 361 (Ja^okha^o).

Abhisāri, a town conquered by Arjuna (q.v.) on his Digvijaya: II, 27, 1027 (cf. VP., II, 174 f.; ZKdM., II, 45).

Abhishāha, a people (= Abhi); with other barbarous tribes they attack Arjuna at the instigation of Duḥçāsana on the 10th day of the great battle, VI, 117ρ, 5485 (B. has Abhi) (Bhishmav.).

Abhishāha, a people (= the preced.): (a) first day of the battle: VI, 18δ, 688 (follow the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra when going to battle) (Bhagavadgītāp.).—(b) 9th day: VI, 106τ, 4809 (defend Bhishma; otherwise PCR.) (Bhishmav.).—(c) 10th day: VI, 119aa, 5648 (defend in vain Bhishma, when he is slain by Arjuna) (Bhishmav.).—(d) 14th day: VII, 91β, 3254 (attempt to prevent Arjuna from killing Jayadratha) (Jayadrathavadhap.); 93γ, 3339 (they angrily attack Arjuna, after he has slain Çrutayudha and Sudakṣiṇa) (do.); 150β¹, 6526 (Duryodhana complains that they have been slain in defending Jayadratha, etc.) (do.); 157ρ, 6949 (are slain by Yudhishtira) (Ghṛtōtkacavadhap.); 161ee, 7207 (are slain by Bhīma) (do.).—After the 15th day: VIII, 5, 127 (Saṅjaya relates to Dhṛtarāṣṭra that they have been slain) (Karna).

Abhishecanika(m) parva. 2, 350 (Dharmarājasya dhimataḥ), i.e. XII, 40 (Yudhishtirābhishekah) (Parvas).

Abhishyanta, the second of the five sons of Kuru and Vāhini: I, 94, 3740 (Pūruvaṃç., § 154).

Abhivādyā = Çiva (1000 names).

Acala, brother-in-law of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, brother of Çakuni: II, 34, 1266 (A^oVṛshakaç caiva Karnaç ca . . .; attends at Yudhishtira's rājasūya (Rājasūyikap.).—V, 168, 5808 (A^oVṛshakaç caiva sahitaḥ dhṛtarāṣṭra ubhau . . . Gāndhāra-mukhyau; a "ratha" of Duryodhana's) (Rathātīr.).—VII, 30, 1303 (Vṛshakacalan), 1309 (id.), 1310 (id.); śyālan taca, i.e. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's), 1312 (Vṛshaka^{an}) (slain by Arjuna on the 12th day of the battle) (Samcāptakavādhap.).—VIII, 5, 130 (id.) (Karṇap.).—XI, 26, 790 (burnt with the others who have fallen in the battle) (Çrāddhap.).—XV, 32, 879 (together with the others who have fallen in the battle he is conjured by Vyāsa from the Gaṅgā and shown to Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī, when towards the close of their lives they visit his hermitage) (Putradarṣanap.).

Acala², a warrior of Skanda's: IX, 45, 2576 (Gadūyuddhap.).

Acala³ = "the Great Spirit": XII, 339, 12864 (Mahā-purushastava).

Acala⁴ = Viṣṇu (1000 names).

Acalā, a mātṛ: IX, 460, 2632 (Skanda).

Ācāryasattama² = Açvatthāman: VIII, 790 (Draupī).

Ācāryasuta = Açvatthāman: VII, 7170. —VIII, 658. —IX, 573.

Ācāryatanaya = Açvatthāman: VII, 9403. —VIII, 361.

Ācāryau = Droṇa and Kṛpā: IV, 1472.

Acintya¹ = Çiva (1000 names²).

Acintya² = Viṣṇu: XII, 13488. —XIII, 7038 (1000 names).

Acyuta ("unfallen"): (a) a proper name of (a) Kṛṣṇa: I, 8476 (°Ārjunau); II, 949; V, 4649; VII, 2982 (Yuyudhāna °Ārjunāḥ), 6502, 7754; VIII, 1245 (°Ārjunau); XII, 1810 (°Yudhishthirau), 13240 (etymology); XIII, 6857, etc. —(β) Viṣṇu identified with Kṛṣṇa (cf. Keçava, e.g. III, 11257); III, 11247; XIII, 6960 (VDSNK), 6984 (ib.), 7008 (ib.). —(γ) cf. °ānuja. —(b) an adjective (where the person designed is otherwise clearly indicated in the context; especially often in the vocative case), applied to a great many persons (Kṛṣṇa, Viṣṇu, Balarāma, Arjuna, Bhīmasena, Yudhishthira, Duryodhana, Droṇa, Açvatthāman, Bhīṣma, Janamejaya, king Parikṣit of Ayodhyā (III, 13169), Āpava (XII, 1757), Çiva (X, 305; Rudra), Skanda (IX, 2480: kumāraram acyutam), the Highest (XII, 11201: brahmanyam paramam devam anantaṁ param a°; 13612: devam paramakam brahma çvetaṁ candrābham a°)).

Acyutānuja = Bhīmasena: IV, 236.

Acyutāyus, a warrior always named together with Çrutāyus: they attack (VII, 93, 3344) and wound (VII, 8350) Arjuna, but are slain by him (VII, 3362); their sons (Niyatāyus and Dīrghāyus) will avenge them, but are likewise slain by Arjuna (VII, 2364); VII, 84, 3438 (Jayadrthavādhap.); VIII, 72^{mv}, 3613 (Karṇap.); IX, 2, 75, 91 (Çalyap.).

Açanin = Çiva (1000 names²).

Āçāvaha¹: I, 3, 42 (Anukram.): according to the explanation of Nīlakaṇṭha, either a synonym of Vāyu (the wind), the tenth of the twelve sons (i.e. "representations," Nil.) of Heaven (Dyaus) (= Mūyā, Nil.) and Vivasvat (i.e. Brahman, Nil.), viz., the geniuses of the ten senses and Mind (manas) together with Mahya (B. Sahya, i.e. Manu, Nil.), who are all manifestations of the one "Son of Heaven" (divaḥ putro),—or (more probably) a Vivasvat or form of the Sun ("Vivasvataḥ" being then an irregular nom. plur.; but B. has putrā instead of purā).

Āçāvaha², I, 186, 6999 (Śvayamvarap., § 232): a prince (enumerated among the Vṛṣṇis), who has presented himself at the "self-choice" (svayamvara) of Kṛṣṇa.

Açiva, III, 221, 14177 (Mārkaṇḍeya): a form of Agni in the enumeration of Mārkaṇḍeya (agnir yaç cāçivo nāma çaktiptjā-pareç ca saḥ dūḥkhārttānāṁ ca sarveṣāṁ çivakṛt salatām çivah; B. reads more probably: agnir yaç ca Çivo . .).

Açleshā (No. 43; cf. No. 44), a nakṣatra (the ninth when beginning with Açvinī; its star of junction is supposed to be c Hydæ; v. Sū° Si°, p. 188). XIII, 64, 3262 (C. has A°, B. A°) (Ānuçāsanik.) (°gān tu yo rūpyam ṛṣabhaṁ vā prayadeçati sa sarvabhayanirmuktaḥ sambharān adhitishṭhati; "nakṣatrayogasya dīnaakalpam," 63, 3212); 89, 4259 (who gives a çūddha "°açleshāyām" procreates intelligent sons) (çrāddhakalpe); 132, 6162 (Ānuçāsanik.) (C.: kārttilo māsi cāçleshā bahulaç cāṣṭamī çivā. B. has bahulaçcāṣṭamī): on the 8th day of the dark half of the month Kārttika, when the moon is in conjunction with Açleshā, a brahman, kṣatriya, vaiçya, or çūdra may, after having fasted at a çrāddha, after the setting of the sun, deposit an offering of black clothes and unguents with flowers in an ant-hill, begging the serpents to hand it over to the world-elephants to increase their strength that it may be equal to the strength of Viṣṇu, when he lifted up Earth; the formula is contained in vv. 7163-6; this he should do for a whole year.

Açleshāh (plur.) = No. 43: XIII, 110, 5392 (Ānuçāsanik.) (description of a cāndra vrata or religious performance with reference to the moon in the month Mārgaṣṛiṣha, when the moon is in conjunction with the asterism Mūla; the explanation of Nīlakaṇṭha runs thus:—Here is described a cāndra vrata to obtain a desired object; on the 1st day of the bright half of Mārgaṣṛiṣha, when there is conjunction (of the moon) with the nakṣatra Mūla, one should begin this cāndra vrata; it consists in locating the nakṣatras in the limbs of the moon, Mūla in his feet, etc., i.e., one should think of Mūla together with its doity as being the feet of the moon; in like manner Rohiṇī, etc., with their deities are to be thought of as being his legs, etc.; everywhere the exchanging of the case-endings is a Vedic liberty; Āṣādhā, Phālgunī, and Bhādrapadā represent each 2 nakṣatras. The vrata is performed as follows: after one has had pronounced the wish of a lucky day, etc. (puṇyāhavācanādiparvakam), having taken upon one's self a religious exercise to obtain a desired object, one should fancy the moon and one's self to be one and the same, distribute the nakṣatras together with their respective deities in the limbs of the moon, and day after day propitiate them by the muttering of Veda verses and oblations, etc. (japahomādina), with the Veda verses required for each of them (tattvanmantraiḥ); thus one should go on until the day of the full moon, and when the vrata is at an end, one should present the butter (ghṛta) left from the oblations to the teacher (ācārya); by the words "samāpte tu ghṛtaṁ dadyāt" it is indicated that ghṛta is the substance of the oblation. Thus doing even a cripple becomes well-shaped (sakalāṅgo) at the day of the full moon; this is expressed and exemplified by the sentence beginning with "paripurnāṅga." Açleshāḥ (C. Ā°, B. Ā°) is to be identified with the nails). (The chapter is in C: called Āṅgaviṁhi, in B. Dānadharna.)

Açma: XII, 587, 2116 (Rājadh.): praises Bhīṣma on his arrow-couch.

Açmaka¹, a rājārshi, son of Vaçiṣṭha and Madayanti, the wife of Kalmāṣapāda: I, 122, 4737 (Mudayanti); 177, 6791 (Vāsiṣṭha) (founded Paudunya).

Açmaka², a brahman present at the deathbed of Bhīṣma: XII, 47, 1592 (Rājadh.) (°Sumantunā).

Açmaka³ (No. 46), a king of the Açmakāḥ: VII, 37, 1606 (Abhimanyuvadhap.) (°śya suto = No. 48 and No. 49, killed by Abhimanyu; this half-çloka is omitted in P.).

Açmakadāyāda (No. 48): VII, 37, 1605 (Abhimanyuvadhap.) (= No. 46, °śya suto; the reading of B differs somewhat from that of C.).

Açmakāḥ (No. 47), a people: VII, 85, 3049 (Jayadrathavadhap.) (in the army of the Pāṇḍavas); VIII, 8, 237 (Karṇap.) (conquered and made tributary by Karṇa); cf. No. 49 (the passages seem to contradict one another; cf. Açvakāḥ and VP. II, 164; perhaps dwelling near Avanti or Oojein, LIA. I, 708/857).

Açmakeçvara (No. 49): VII, 1608 (= No. 48).

Açmaki, a Yādavi, the wife of king Prācinvat and mother of Sampyāti: I, 95 (§ 156), 3766 (Pūruvaṁç.).

Açman, a brahman consulted by Janaka-Vaidēha: XII, 28, 834 (Rājadh.) (°gītām itihāsam purāṭanam); 835 (brāhmaṇam), (837), 891.

Açmaprsththa, a holy stone in Gayā (Nil. "Pretaçilā," the stone of the dead), a visit to which expiates the murder of a brahman: XIII, 256, 1728 (Āṅgirasas tṛthayūtiyām, v. Ānuçāsanik.). "Pret Silā exists at the present day. It is not a stone, but a rocky hill some 300 or 400 feet high." (Grierson.)

Açoka¹, a king: I, 67 (§ 130), 2650 (Aṁçvāt.) (an incarnation of the Asura Açva); XII, 4, 114 (Rājadh.) (present at the self-choice of king Citrāṅgada's daughter in Çrīmadrājapura, where Duryodhana carries off the bride).

Açoka² = Vishṇu (1000 names).

Açokatirtha, a tirtha or holy place in the south: III, 88, 8338 (Dharmyatīrthak.) (bahulāçramam).

Açrama = Vishṇu (1000 names).

Āçramanivāsa ("the dwelling in the hermitage"). § 795 (Svargārohanap.): XVIII, 6, 278 (°e havishyaṁ bhojayed dvijān), i.e. Āçramavāsikaparvan.

Āçramapūjita = Çiva (1000 names²).

Āçramastha = Çiva (1000 names²).

Āçramasthāna ("the dwelling in the hermitage"). § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 91 (°saṁçrayaḥ . . . Dhāratadrumah), i.e. Āçramavāsikaparvan.

Āçramavāsa¹ ("the dwelling in the hermitage") = Āçramavāsaparvan. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 355 (°ākhyam parva).

Āçramavāsa² (do.) = Āçramavāsikaparvan. § 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 611 (°ākhyam parva), 617 (do.).

[Āçramavāsaparvan] ("the section relating to the dwelling in the hermitage"), the 95th of the minor parvas of Mbh. (cf. Āçramavāsa). § 787: Asked by Janamejaya how the Pāṇḍavas, having acquired their kingdom, conducted themselves towards Dhṛtarāṣṭra, how Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī behaved, and for how many years his grandfather ruled the kingdom, Vaiçampāyana said: The Pāṇḍavas ruled, placing Dhṛtarāṣṭra at their head; Vidura, Sanjaya, and Yuyutsu used to wait upon Dhṛtarāṣṭra; for 15 years they did all things under the advice of the old king; Kuntī obeyed Gāndhārī; Draupadī and Subhadrā, etc., showed the utmost respect for the old king and his queen; the Pāṇḍavas surrounded the old king and his queen with every luxury, and Maireya wines, etc. Kṛpa waited upon Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Vyāsa frequently visited him and recited histories of old R., celestial ascetics, P., and Rā.; Vidura, under the orders of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, superintended religion and law; through his policy the Pāṇḍavas obtained numerous services from their feudatories and followers; Dhṛtarāṣṭra liberated prisoners and pardoned those condemned to death; the old king, on his pleasure excursions, was supplied with everything by Yudhisṭhira; the kings who came to Hastinapura waited upon Dhṛtarāṣṭra as before; Kuntī, etc. (α), served Gāndhārī like maidservants; Bhīmasena alone did not forget his grievances (XV, 1); Dhṛtarāṣṭra was honoured by R., and used to make gifts to the brahmins in rites for P. and çrāddhas for his sons, etc.; Dhṛtarāṣṭra also felt great affection for the Pāṇḍavas, and so did Gāndhārī; Gāndhārī performed çrāddhas with gifts; grieved at the remembrance of Duryodhana, Dhṛtarāṣṭra every morning blessed the Pāṇḍavas, wishing them victory in battle, etc. Yudhisṭhira became very much liked by all the four castes, and forgot the wrongs inflicted upon him by Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons; from fear of Yudhisṭhira nobody dared to speak evil of Duryodhana or Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma, however, revered the old king outwardly, with a very unwilling heart (XV, 2). While there was no variance in the cordiality between Yudhisṭhira and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the latter could not but feel unfriendly towards Bhīma, and Bhīma, recollecting his foes Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Duḥçāsana, indulged in boastful language about Duryodhana and his brothers whom he had slain. Gāndhārī was not moved. After 15 years Dhṛtarāṣṭra, afflicted by the wordy darts of Bhīma, became penetrated with despair and grief; Yudhisṭhira, etc. (β), did not know it. Dhṛtarāṣṭra opened his heart to his friends (γ); now he was observing a vow of fast, which he had concealed from Yudhisṭhira, lying on the earth clad in deerskin; Gāndhārī observed similar vows; now he asked Yudhisṭhira's permission for himself and Gāndhārī to retire into the woods clad in rags and bark in order to practise austerities. Yudhisṭhira lamented (δ) ("Let Yuyutsu be made king; I shall go into the woods"); but Dhṛtarāṣṭra's resolution remains unaltered; he asked Sanjaya and Kṛpa to speak for him to Yudhisṭhira; leaning on Gāndhārī he looked like one deprived of life; Yudhisṭhira lamented (ε), and gently rubbed Dhṛtarāṣṭra's breast and face with cold water and revived him by the touch of his hand, on which wore jewels and medicinal herbs. Dhṛtarāṣṭra said that the touch of Yudhisṭhira was highly gratifying, embraced him, and smelt his head; Vidura, Kuntī, etc., wept; Gāndhārī bore her sorrow with fortitude. Dhṛtarāṣṭra renewed his request; Vyāsa came (XV, 3) and asked Yudhishthira to permit Dhṛtarāshṭra to follow the path of all the ancient R.-ṛ.; "Gāndhārī bears her grief with fortitude." Yudhishthira yielded to Vyāsa's intercession; Vyāsa summed up the reasons for Dhṛtarāshṭra's retirement (ξ), and then proceeded to the woods. Yudhishthira then said that he would conform to the advice of Vyāsa, etc. (η) (XV, 4); Dhṛtarāshṭra, Gāndhārī, etc. (η), entering the palace of Dhṛtarāshṭra, ate a little. Then Dhṛtarāshṭra gave Yudhishthira advice about how the latter should rule his kingdom (θ) (XV, 5). Continuation (XV, 6). Continuation; agreeably to the science known to Uçanas, [arrays called] Çakata, Padma, and Vajra should be formed; "thou hast been instructed in all duties by Bhishma, Kṛṣṇa, and Vidura"; 100 horse-sacrifices and righteous rule are productive of equal merit (XV, 7). Yudhishthira gratefully accepted his instructions, as Bhishma, etc. (ι), no longer were there to instruct him. Dhṛtarāshṭra wishes to depart soon, and Gāndhārī reminded him that he has got the permission of Vyāsa, and asks him when he would go to the forest with the permission of Yudhishthira; he wished first to make gifts for the advancement in the other world of his dead sons and other kinsmen (who were now pretas), and assembled all the subjects, while Yudhishthira brought all the articles necessary; Dhṛtarāshṭra, in a touching address, took leave of that large concourse of men of all the four castes (κ) (XV, 8), recapitulating the history of the realm from Çāntanu downwards (λ) (XV, 9). The citizens were exceedingly agitated upon hearing Dhṛtarāshṭra's address; they charged the learned brahman Çāmba (B. Sām̐ba) with answering him (μ): "King Duryodhana never did us any wrong; we were well protected and ruled by him; we have also enjoyed great happiness for thousands of years under Yudhishthira, who follows the conduct of the R.-ṛ. of old (Kuru, Saṃvarana, Bharata, etc.); the carnage on the field of Kurukshetra was not brought about by Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Çakuni, nor by Dhṛtarāshṭra, but by Destiny, which in 18 days caused 18 akṣauhīnīs to be destroyed by Bhishma, etc. (ν); the Pāṇḍavas are capable of ruling without either thee or ourselves to look after them; Kuntī, etc. (ξ), will not do the least wrong to the people." Then Dhṛtarāshṭra slowly dismissed the assembly, and entered his house with Gāndhārī (XV, 10). After that night had passed away, Dhṛtarāshṭra sent Vidura to Yudhishthira in order to announce that he would set out for the woods on the coming day of the full moon in the month of Kārttika, and to solicit some wealth for performing the çrāddha of Bhishma, etc. (ο). Yudhishthira and Arjuna applauded his words; Bhīma was unwilling, recollecting Duryodhana; Arjuna sought to pacify him, applauded by Yudhishthira; Bhīmasena maintained that gifts for Bhishma, etc. (π), should be given by them, and by Kuntī for Karṇa; "Let Duryodhana, etc., sink from a miserable to a more miserable position," reminding his brothers of the woes and disgrace inflicted upon them by those for whose benefit Dhṛtarāshṭra asked for wealth (ρ). Yudhishthira rebuked him (XV, 11). Arjuna urged Bhīma to forget the injuries. Yudhishthira said to Vidura that he would give Dhṛtarāshṭra so much wealth as he wished for the obsequies of his sons and Bhishma, etc., and asked him to tell Dhṛtarāshṭra not to be angry with Bhīmasena (XV, 12). Vidura reported the speeches of Yudhishthira, Arjuna, and Bhīma to Dhṛtarāshṭra. Dhṛtarāshṭra expressed his satisfaction, and set his heart on making large presents on the day of full moon in the month of Kārttika (XV, 13). Dhṛtarāshṭra invited thousands of deserving brahmins [and] superior R.

for Bhishma, etc.; and made large gifts to them, naming Droṇa, etc. (σ); tellers and scribes appointed by Yudhishthira ceaselessly ask the old king as to what should be given to each recipient that presented himself; unto him that was to receive 100 a 1000 were given, and he who was to receive 1000 was presented with 10,000 at the command of Yudhishthira; this was given by Dhṛtarāshṭra for the benefit in the other world of his sons and grandsons, as also of himself and Gāndhārī; the donation lasted for 10 days (XV, 14). On the day of full moon in the month of Kārttika Dhṛtarāshṭra (and Gāndhārī) summoned the Pāṇḍavas, caused the rites to be performed, and his sacred fire to be taken up, put on deerskins and bark, and set out with his daughters-in-law. The ladies uttered loud wails; Yudhishthira and Arjuna were pierced with grief; Bhīmasena, etc. (τ), all followed Dhṛtarāshṭra; Kuntī held on her shoulders the hand of Gāndhārī, who walked with her bandaged eyes; Dhṛtarāshṭra walked behind Gāndhārī, placing his hand on her shoulder; Kṛṣṇa, etc. (υ), all proceeded with Dhṛtarāshṭra; the citizens of all orders were as distressed as they had been at the departure of the Pāṇḍavas after the match of dice († 431-440) (XV, 15); Dhṛtarāshṭra left the city through the principal gate, and then asked those who followed him to desist. Vidura and Saṃjaya retired with him into the woods; Kṛṣṇa and Yuyutsu he caused to remain, and made them over to Yudhishthira. Kuntī retired with Dhṛtarāshṭra, though Yudhishthira sought to dissuade her; she said: "Never show any disregard for Sahadeva: he is very much attached to me, and to thee also"; then she reminded him of Karṇa, etc. (φ); Yudhishthira reminded her that she had herself formerly recited to them the story of Vidulā, when they were about to set out from the town, and that they had won sovereignty guided by her words communicated through Kṛṣṇa. Also Bhīma dissuaded her, pointing out the grief of the sons of Mādri; but in vain. Draupadī and Subhadrā followed her, and so did the Pāṇḍavas with all their wives and attendants; Kuntī addressed them (XV, 16), assigning her reasons for her conduct (χ) (XV, 17). The Pāṇḍavas and Draupadī then desisted from following her. The Pāṇḍavas circumambulated Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., for taking their leave to return. Dhṛtarāshṭra (with Gāndhārī and Vidura) made a final effort of dissuading Kuntī from retiring into the forest with him, but in vain. The ladies set up a loud wail of grief. Hāstinapura became plunged into sorrow: no festivals were observed. The Pāṇḍavas were without any energy. Dhṛtarāshṭra arrived on the banks of the Bhāgīrathī and took rest there for the night among the brahmins, who there, like himself, ignited their sacred fires; arrangement of the beds of Vidura, etc. (ψ); the Yājaka brahmins, etc., of the king laid themselves down on their respective beds; that night seemed as delightful to them as a Brāhmī night. When the night had passed away Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., going through their morning acts and rites, continue their journey (XV, 18). Following the advice of Vidura, Dhṛtarāshṭra took up his abode on the banks of the Bhāgīrathī; many of the four orders came to see him; he gladdened them all by his words. At evening Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (ω), bathed in the stream, etc.; Kuntī led him and Gāndhārī. Then he proceeded to Kurukshetra to the retreat of R.-ṛ. Çatayūpa (δ), who received him with due rites; accompanied by him he proceeded to the retreat of Vyāsa, where he received the initiation [into the forest life]; after having returned he took up his abode in the retreat of Çatayūpa, who instructed him in all the rites of the forest mode of life, at the command of Vyāsa. Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (as), began to practise austerities (XV, 19). R. Nārada, etc. (ββ), came there and gladdened Dhṛtarāshṭra with discourses on religion. R. Nārada mentioned the kings that attained to heaven after practising penances in that very retreat (γγ): Sahasracitya, Çailālaya, Prahadhra, Purukutsa, Çaçaloman; "Thou also wilt, with Gāndhārī, through the grace of Vyāsa, attain to a very high goal; dwelling in the presence of Indra, Pāṇḍu always thinks of thee, and will assist thee in the attainment of prosperity; Kuntī, by serving thee and Gāndhārī, will obtain residence with her husband in the other world; we behold all this with our spiritual vision; Vidura will enter into Yudhisṭhira; Sañjaya will ascend to Heaven." Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., praised Nārada. Çatayūpa asked Nārada what regions (lokāḥ) will be acquired by Dhṛtarāshṭra. Nārada said: On a visit to Indra I saw Pāṇḍu; Indra said that after three years Dhṛtarāshṭra and Gāndhārī would go to the abode of Kubera, on a car moving at will, and he would rove through the regions of D., G., and Rā.; this is a mystery of the gods. All the persons present (as also Dhṛtarāshṭra) became highly pleased. Then they went away by the path of the Siddhas (XV, 20).—§ 788: The anxiety of the Pāṇḍavas and citizens about the fate of Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., and their despair when they reflected on that terrible slaughter of their kinsmen (α); only Parikshit somehow consoled them (XV, 21); afflicted with grief, they failed to derive pleasure from anything, nor did they attend to their kingly offices, thinking of Kuntī and Gāndhārī. They set their heart upon seeing Dhṛtarāshṭra in his forest retreat. Sahadeva, lamenting the fate of Kuntī, and expressing his longing to see her, proposed a visit to the woods, supported by Draupadī, who mentioned Kuntī and Gāndhārī and Dhṛtarāshṭra. Yudhisṭhira caused his army to be equipped, ordered litters, etc., for the ladies, and proclaimed that they would march out to-morrow, permitting the citizens to follow them. The next morning they set out, then waited five days for such citizens as would accompany them, and then proceeded towards the forest (XV, 22), headed by Arjuna (on a car with white horses) and Kṛpa (description of the expedition); Bhīma on a gigantic elephant, the twins on two fleet steeds, the ladies in closed litters, scattering showers of wealth as they proceeded, headed by Draupadī. They proceeded slowly. Yuyutsu and Dhaumya protected the city. They reached Kurukshetra, crossed the Yamunā, and approached the retreat of Dhṛtarāshṭra (XV, 23). The Pāṇḍavas and their followers, alighting from their cars, walked on foot; the ascetics told them that Dhṛtarāshṭra had gone to the Yamunā for his ablutions, etc., and pointed out the way to them. Sahadeva ran with speed towards Kuntī; they both wept; she informed Gāndhārī, and then advanced towards Yudhisṭhira, etc. (β), dragging the childless old couple; the Pāṇḍavas fell down at their feet, and took from their hands the jars of water they were carrying. Yudhisṭhira presented all his followers one after another to Dhṛtarāshṭra, mentioning their names and races. Dhṛtarāshṭra rejoiced and went to his retreat that was applauded by Śi. and Cā. (XV, 24). To the ascetics, who had come from various regions in order to see the Pāṇḍavas, Sañjaya pointed out each of them († γ); then Dhṛtarāshṭra asked († v. 660-674) (XV, 25) Yudhisṭhira about the welfare of the Pāṇḍavas and their devotion to P. and D.; Yudhisṭhira answered, enquiring after Vidura, who turned out to be engaged in penances, subsisting on air alone, and was now seen at a distance with matted locks, and gravel in his mouth, and exceedingly emaciated, naked, and besmeared with filth and dust; Vidura fled, pursued by Yudhisṭhira; at last he stood motionless in yoga, and entered the body of Yudhisṭhira, who felt that he had become stronger than before and had acquired many additional virtues and accomplishments, and recollected his own state before his birth among men; he had heard of yoga-practice from Vyāsa. He desired to cremate the lifeless body of Vidura, but was prevented by an invisible voice which said, that in Vidura (who was Dharma) was Yudhisṭhira's body also, and that Vidura would attain to the regions (lokāḥ) called Santānikāḥ. Yudhisṭhira came and informed Dhṛtarāshṭra; all became filled with wonder. They passed that night under a tree (XV, 26), conversing on morality and wealth. The next morning they surveyed the retreat (description) and the other retreats in the forest. Yudhisṭhira made presents to the ascetics (specification); then he returned to Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc. (δ); many M.-r. (Çatayūpa, etc.) who dwelt in Kurukshetra came there, as also Vyāsa (XV, 27), who enquired after Dhṛtarāshṭra's, etc. (ε), welfare, and told them who Vidura was, mentioning the course of Dharma by Māṇḍavya (with an expenditure of his penances); he was superior to Bṛhaspati and Çukra; and how Vyāsa had procreated him upon the soil of Vicitravīrya; he was Dharma in consequence of his practices of dhāraṇā and dhyaṇa; from Dharma also Yudhisṭhira took his birth. Vyāsa says that he has come to show a wonderful effect of his own penances: "what dost thou wish to see, or ask, or hear?" (XV, 28).

Açvamedhika(m) parva(n) ("the section treating of the Horse-sacrifice," the 93rd of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Açvamedhika(m) parva(n)). § 778: Vaiçampāyana said (XIV, 1): After Dhṛtarāṣṭra had offered libations of water [to Bhīshma], Yudhishtira fell down in grief on the bank of Gangā. Incited by Kṛṣṇa, Bhīma took him up, surrounded by the Pāṇḍavas; Dhṛtarāṣṭra comforts him, saying that it is he and Gāndhārī who ought to grieve, and referring to Vidura's advice about abandoning Duryodhana and his warnings against Karna and Çakuni (XIV, 1). Kṛṣṇa also exhorts him, referring to the duties of the kṣattriyas expounded by Bhīshma, Vyāsa, Nārada, and Vidura. Yudhishtira cannot forget the slaughter of Karna. Vyāsa also comforts him (XIV, 2), and reminding him that D. and A. perform sacrifices, and that by sacrifices D. vanquished Dā., he urged him to perform the Rajasuya, the Horse-sacrifice, the Sarva-medha, and the Naramedha; [especially] the Horse-sacrifice after the example of Rāma Daçarathi and Bharata Daushmānti, and indicated to him a spot in the Himavat, where there was gold in abundance, left behind by the brahmins at the sacrifice of Marutta of the Karandhama race. Asked by Yudhishtira, Vyāsa told the history of Marutta (XIV, 3) * * i.e. Samvartta-Maruttiya (β). Vaiçampāyana said: † Yudhishtira was delighted at hearing the speech of Vyāsa, and desirous of performing his sacrifices with those riches, he consulted with his ministers (XIV, 4-10).—§ 779: Vaiçampāyana said: When Vyāsa had concluded his speech, Kṛṣṇa addressed Yudhishtira, saying that Yudhishtira's karman has not yet been annihilated, nor had his foes been subjugated—"How canst thou be ignorant of the enemies in thy own flesh?"—and related the history of Indra's war with Vṛtra (β) (XIV, 11). Kṛṣṇa then expounds that, as physical ailments and health depend on the distribution of the cold, warm, and windy [humours] of the body, so do the mental ailments and health depend on sattva, rajas, and tamas in the soul [mind]; happiness is overcome by sorrow, and sorrow by pleasure; Yudhishtira should not recall his past sorrows: Kṛṣṇa in the assembly, etc. (α); "the time has now come when thou must fight single-handed with thy mind" (XIV, 12); salvation is not attained by foregoing external things; Mṛtyu (death) is [the thought] "mine," and the eternal Brahman is [the thought] "not mine"; as no creature is ever destroyed, ahimsā (absence of injury) may exist even when one has pierced [a creature's] body, and vice versa; († v. 339-341): † the yogin knows yoga to be the perfect way, on account of the practices of his many former births; quoting the old verses sung by Kāma: "no creature is able to destroy me without [resorting to] the [proper] methods [i.e. subjugation of all desires, practice of yoga, etc.] . . ." (XIV, 13).—§ 780: Vaiçampāyana said: Thus Yudhishtira was consoled, exhorted by Viçvataçravasa, etc. (β); and having again performed the obsequial rites for his relatives, etc., he ruled the earth. He said to Vyāsa, Nārada, etc., that he would now perform the sacrifice, and said that they would go to the Himālaya under the protection of Vyāsa [to fetch the gold], according to the words of Vyāsa, D.-ṛ. Nārada, and Devasthāna. Then M.-ṛ. took leave of Yudhishtira, Kṛṣṇa, and Arjuna. A short time passed away while they performed their purifications after Bhīshma's death, and gave large gifts to the brahmins as grādha (aurddhvadehikaṃ) to the Kurus Bhīshma, Karna, etc., accompanied by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and then they entered the city of Hastinapura (XIV, 14).—§ 781: Asked by Janamejaya what Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna did when the Pāṇḍavas had reconquered and pacified their kingdom, Vaiçampāyana said: When the Pāṇḍava-kingdom had been conquered and pacified K. and A. travelled with great pleasure amidst picturesque sceneries, like Indra and his wife (? so PCR.) (Deveçvarau) in heaven, or like the Açvins in Nandana, and [then] entered the palace of Indraprastha in great merriment, reciting the genealogies of B. and gods, etc., and Kṛṣṇa consoled Arjuna for the death of his relatives (α). It was long since he had seen Varuḍa, Baladeva, and the Vṛkṣi-heroes; he, therefore, asked leave to go to Dvāravati, and to accompany him to Yudhishtira and apprise him of his departure. († v. 404-6): Arjuna sorrowfully replied, "Be it so" (XIV, 15).

They are twelve, enumerated § 88 (Amçāvat), 1, 65, 2522, etc. (1, Dhātṛ; 2, Mitra; 3, Aryaman; 4, Çakra; 5, Varuṇa; 6, Amçā; 7, Bhaga; 8, Vivasvat; 9, Pūshan; 10, Savitṛ; 11, Tvastṛ; 12, Vishṇu).—§ 191 (Sambhavap): 123, 4823-4 (in the order 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 4, Indra, 8, 9, 11, 10; then, Parjanyaḥ caiva Viṣṇuḥ ca Adityā dvādaçā (f) smṛtāḥ; perhaps to be read jaghanyas tv eva Viṣṇuḥ ca, cf. v. 2524; but cf. also BR. s.v., and infra; Nil. says nothing).—§ 665 (Mokshadh): XII, 208, 7581, etc. (in the order 7, 6, 3, 2, 5, 10, 1, 8, 11, 9, 4, Indra, 12).—§ 770 (Ānuçāsanik): XIII, 151, 7092, etc. (in the order 6, 7, 2, 5, 1, 3, 8, 10, Jayanto Bhāskarā tathā, 11, 9, 4, Indra, 12); cf. BR. s.v., and Muir, Or. S.T., especially iv, pp. 11-15, 64, 114-121; the youngest and most important is (the Dwarf incarnation of) Vishṇu (I, 2522); Indra is the principal, § 120 (Amçāvat), I, 66, 2600; and the oldest and best is Varuṇa, § 564 (Mātalyop), V, 98, 3534. For their superintendence of the chariot of the Sun, each in one of the twelve months of the year, in the Purāṇas, see VP. II, pp. 285 ff.; the order is, 1, 3, 2, 5, 4, Indra, 8, 9, 10, Parjanya instead of Savitṛ, 6, 7, 11, 12. Of the older conception of six, seven (or eight) Ādityas there seems to be no trace in the Mhbh., unless it be XII, 1504 (v. Aditi); they came into existence from the coals at the sacrifice of Īiva in the shape of Varuṇa (!), § 747 (Suvartopatti), XIII, 85, 4131 (yo dhishṇyeshu divi sthitāḥ). In most cases they are named together with the other devagāṇas, etc.; thus, for instance:—

§ 3 (Anukram.): I, 3, 34 (v. [Ādivamçāvatārana] ("genealogy"), the fifth chapter of the Ādivamçāvatārana-parvan (VI), I, 63; it includes:

§§ 73-4: Vasu Uparicara and his sons.

§ 75: Girikā.

§ 76: Matsya.

§§ 77-8: Vyāsa and his pupils.

§ 79: Bhīṣma.

§ 80: Anīmāṇḍavya.

§ 81: Sañjaya; Karṇa.

§ 82: Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva.

§ 83. Birth of Sūtyaki (son of Satyaka) and Kṛtavarma (son of Hydika) (Nārāyaṇam anuvratāni), Droṇa, Kṛpī, Kṛpa, Aśvatthāman, Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Kṛṣṇā, Nagnajit, and Subala, Çakuni, Gāndhārī and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura, and Yudhishṭhira and his brothers, and the 101 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (only Duryodhana and the Karṇa Yuyutsu, born of a Vaiçyā woman, is named), of whom 11 (a) (including Yuyutsu) are enumerated as mahārathas, and Abhimanyu, and the sons of Pāncālī (Draupadī or Kṛṣṇā) (enumerated) (β), and Ghaṭotkaca, and Çikhaṇḍī(n); "these are only the principal ones of the hundreds of thousands of monarchs who came to fight against each other in that great battle of the Kurus."

Ādivaṃṣāvatāraṇa = °parvan (B. ādir aṃṣāvatāraṇam). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 312.—§ 11 (do.): 2, 360.

Ādivaṃṣāvatāraṇaparvan. § 70: I, 59. (a) Kathābandha: in the intervals of the duties of the snake-sacrifice Vyāsa recited Mahābhārata.

(b) Kathānubandha. § 70: I, 60. Hearing that Janamejaya was installed in the snake-sacrifice, Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana went thither (his birth, growth, studies, dividing the Vedas into four parts, and his begetting of Pāṇḍu, etc., are mentioned) with his disciples, and asked by Janamejaya about the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas, he directed his disciple Vaiçampāyana to tell their story.

(c) Bhāratasūtram. § 71: I, 61. Vaiçampāyana gives a survey of the history of the Pāṇḍavas.

(d) Bhāratapraçamaṣ. § 72: I, 62. Janamejaya wishes to hear the Mahābhārata in full. Vaiçampāyana describes its virtues (v. 2320: Bhāratānam mahaj janma Mahābhāratam ucyate); Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana had attained his object in three years, rising daily and purifying himself and performing his ascetic devotions he had composed this Mahābhārata; he that gives away a copy of the Bhārata to one that asks for it does indeed make a present of the whole earth with her belt of seas. Vide Ādivaṃṣāvatāraṇa.

§ 84: I, 64. Jamadagni's son, after having twenty-one times destroyed the kṣhattriya race, began ascetic penances on the Mahendra mountain. A new kṣhattriya caste sprang from the kṣhattriya ladies and the brahmins. Description of the Kṛta yuga. Then the Daityas being repeatedly defeated by the Ādityas and deprived of heaven, the Asuras began to be born on Earth in such numbers that the Earth became incapable of supporting herself, even with the united strength of the Pannagas (bhūtasattvaughaḥ). The Earth then applied to Brahmān, who was surrounded by gods, brahmins, great Rshis, Gandharvas, and Apsarases. Brahmān appointed the gods, Gandharvas and Apsarases, to be born on Earth in order to ease her of her burthen by destroying the Asuras. They agreed, and going to Vaikuṇṭha they also prevailed upon Nārāyaṇa to become incarnate.

Agastya¹, a ṛshi, brother of Vasishṭha and son of Mitra and Varuṇa; * he is called Maitrāvaruṇi ("son of Mitra and Varuṇa") and Kumbhayoni ("born in a jar") (see below); he once saw his ancestors hanging in a cave, and was urged by them to procure progeny; he then from the most beautiful parts of all animals created Lopāmudrā and let her become the daughter of the king of Vidarbha; when he had married her he, in order to procure riches for her, applied successively to three kings, and then to the Dānava Ilvala, who shaped his own younger brother into a he-goat that was digested by Agastya. Agastya had a son by Lopāmudrā named Dṛdhasyu or Idhmavāha. [Agastyopākhyāna.] § 382 (Tīrthay.): In the city of Manimat there lived formerly a Daiteya Ilvala, whose younger brother was Vātāpi (Prāhradi, v. 8645). Ilvala, inflamed with wrath against all brahmins, because a brahmar had refused to grant him a son equal to Indra, used to transform Vātāpi into a ram and offer his flesh to brahmins as food, and then to recall him to life (whomsoever Ilvala summoned with his voice would come back even from the abode of Yama), and Vātāpi, ripping the flanks of the brahmins, would come out laughing. Thus they killed many brahmins. Meanwhile Agastya saw his ancestors hanging in a hole with the heads downwards, and was asked by them to procure offspring to them. As he did not see any wife worthy of himself, he selected the most beautiful parts from various creatures and created an excellent woman, whom he caused to be born as the daughter of the Vidarbha king, who was then undergoing ascetic penances for obtaining offspring. She was named Lopāmudrā, and was very beautiful. When she attained to puberty no one dared to ask for her hand (III, 96). When Agastya asked the Vidarbha king to bestow her upon him, the king and his queen became much afflicted, but at her own request Lopāmudrā was bestowed upon Agastya, who immediately asked her to discard her ornaments and dress herself in rags and barks and deer-skins and partake of his vows, and proceeding to Gaṅgādāra they practised the severest penances. When at last he summoned her for marital intercourse she made it a condition that he should approach her on a bed like to that which she had in the palace of her father, and that both should be adorned with costly ornaments, and she told him to procure these things without impairing his ascetic merit (III, 97). Agastya then went to King Ṛutarvan and asked him for wealth, but seeing that his expenditure was equal to his income, he took nothing, but, together with Ṛutarvan, went to King Bradhnaṣva, with the same result; then all three went to King Trasadanyu Paurukutsa of the line of Ikshvāku, with the same result. At the suggestion of the three kings they all four went to Ila (III, 98). Ila went out with his ministers to receive them on the confines of his domain. He prepared the flesh of Vatāpi in order to entertain them, at which the kings became sad, but Agastya ate it all, and when Ila summoned Vatāpi there came only air out of Agastya's stomach, Vatāpi having already been digested. Then Ila, becoming sad, promised to give them wealth if Agastya could tell him what he intended to give, and Agastya rightly said that he intended to give each of the kings 10,000 cows and as many gold coins, and to Agastya twice as much, and a car that would be found to be a golden one, with two steeds (Virāva and Surāva). The car brought Agastya and the kings to Agastya's hermitage within the twinkling of an eye. Then the rājarekhis went away to their cities. When Agastya proposed to Lopāmudrā to choose between 1000 sons, or 100 each equal to 10, or 10 each equal to 100, or 1 equal to 1000, she chose the last alternative. After she had conceived he retired into the forest. After seven years she gave birth to Drdhaśyū, who came out as if repeating the Vedas with the Upanishads and Angas; and from carrying, while yet a child, loads of sacrificial fuel to the hermitage of his father, he was called Idhmaraḥa. Agastya was highly pleased, and his ancestors obtained the lokas they desired.—§ 384: In the kr̥ta age the Dānava tribes named Kālākēyas under Vṛtra pursued the gods under Indra. The gods, on the suggestion of Brahmān, with Nārāyaṇa at their head, proceeded to the hermitage of the ṛshi Dadhīca on the other bank of Sarasvatī, and having prevailed upon him to leave his body, they caused Ivaśṭṛ to construct of his bones the six-sided (ṣaḍaṅgi) vajra which Trasṭṛ handed to Indra that he might slay Vṛtra with it (III, 100). In the encounter that ensued between the gods and the Kālākēyas the gods were defeated, until Nārāyaṇa, the gods, and the brahmarṣhis had transferred their own vigour to Indra. He then hurled the vajra against Vṛtra and slew him so that he fell headlong like the Mandara mountain hurled of yore from Vishṇu's hand; but Indra fled in fear, desiring to take shelter in a lake, thinking that the vajra had not been hurled from his hand and that Vṛtra was still alive, while the gods defeated the Dānavas, who fled to the depths of the sea. Here they conspired for the destruction of the three worlds, and resolved upon destroying all who were possessed of ascetic virtues (tapas), for so the universe would itself be destroyed, as it is supported by asceticism (III, 101). Remaining in the depths of the sea by day, the Kāleṃyas during the night slew the munis in the hermitages and sacred spots (puṇyashodhātanaṣu); in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, 197 ascetics; in that of Cyavana, 100; in that of Bharadvāja, 20, without being seen; every morning people saw the dead bodies and mutilated limbs of the munis and the disturbed agnihotras scattered on the ground. Men fled for their lives into all directions or killed themselves from fear. Some brave bowmen searched in vain for the evildoers. The gods with Indra repaired to Nārāyaṇa (c) (III, 102). They did not know by whom the brahmanas were being killed during the night. Vishṇu explained the whole affair to them, and told them to apply to Agastya (Maitravaruni) that he might dry up the sea, as no one else was capable of so doing. They then went to the hermitage of Agastya, and mentioned to him that he had delivered the gods from Nahusha and caused Vindhya to cease to increase in height (in competition with the Sun), the world having been covered with darkness (III, 103).—§ 385: Vindhya (q.v.).—§ 386: At the request of the gods Agastya, accompanied by ṛshis, gods, men, Uragas (snakes), Gandharvas, Yakṣas, and Kimpurushas, approached the ocean (III, 104) and drank it up, to the amazement of the gods, who called him Vidhatr and the creator of the worlds, while the musical instruments of Gandharvas were playing, and celestial blossoms were showered upon him. The Kāleṃyas, who had previously been burnt by the tapas of the munis, were now destroyed by the gods, except some few who, rending asunder the goddess Earth, sought refuge in Patāla. The gods now asked Agastya to fill up the ocean again, but he had already digested the water. The gods with Vishṇu came to Brahmān and spoke to him about replenishing the sea (III, 105). Brahmān dismissed them, saying that only after a long course of time the ocean would be brought to resume its wonted state by the agnates of king Bhagiratha.

(Skandayuddha): III, 231.—§§ 508-9 (Kārttikeyastava): III, 232 (Agni (Adbhuta (?), III, v. 14284) having become enamoured of the wives of the seven Rāhis, at first entered their gārhapatya fire, then after a long time retired to the forest (vanam; Nil. says nothing) in order to destroy himself; Svāhā, who had loved him in vain, cohabited with him, successively assuming the guise of the wives of the Rāhis (six of the Kṛttikās or Ploids) except Arundhati, and going out of the forest in the guise of a bird (Garūḍī, Suparpi, Vinatā) she threw the semen in a golden basin on the Çveta mountain; this took place on the Amūvasyā day; on the Pratipad day the semen became an embryo (Skanda); on the fourth day Skanda was fully developed. The six wives of the Rāhis were divorced by their husbands. Skanda is called the son of Rudra, because Agni is called Rudra by brahmins, and because he was produced by Rudra entering Fire (and Umā coalescing with Svāhā), etc., and the Çveta mountain was formed of Rudra's semen virile. Agni gave to Skanda a red cock, that formed his ensign perched on the top of his chariot. The six divorced wives of the Rāhis, together with Vinatā, obtained from Skanda that they became his mothers. At the request of Indra they (incl. of Vinatā, see v. 14464 and Nil., i.e. the Kṛttikās) were placed among the Nakshatras (and presided by Agni) instead of Abhijit (q.v.). Brahman ordered that time should be reckoned from Dhanishthā, while it had formerly been reckoned from Rohini (so Nil.). XII, 78, 2922): Brahman had granted the Asura Tāraka the boon that he could not be slain by gods, Asuras, Rākṣasas, etc., and the deities had, in consequence of their endeavour in former times to stop propagation, been cursed by Pārvatī, that they were not to have any offspring; but Agni had not been there; he therefore, said Brahman, would beget an offspring for the destruction of Tāraka, etc.: "Kāma is Rudra's seed, a portion of which fell into Agni, who will cast it into Gaṅgā. Therefore, make a search for Agni. Agni is the most eternal of all creatures; he is older than Rudra himself," etc. After searching in vain every part of the universe, the gods successively learnt from a frog that had been scorched by the energy of Agni that he was residing in the nethermost regions of the water; from an elephant, that he was within an acvāttha tree; and from a parrot, that he had entered the heart of a çami tree. All frogs, elephants, and parrots were cursed by Agni and blessed by the gods in various ways: the çami tree the gods made a sacred fuel fit for producing fire in all religious rites; the heated waters that are found in the nethermost regions are vomited forth by the mountain springs. Agni then united himself in spiritual congress with Gaṅgā, who, being unable to bear the seed, cast it off resplendent like gold on the breast of Meru, on a forest of reeds. Hence Agni was called Hiranyaretas; Earth, Vasumatī; the child, Skanda and Guha, and, because it was nursed by the Kṛttikās, Kārttikeya; gold, Jātarūpa. It was in this way that gold came into existence as the offspring of Agni; gold is truly the illustrious Agni, the lord of all things, and the foremost of all Prajāpatīs; the most sacred of all sacred things is gold; it has for its essence Agni and Soma. In days of yore (lokādaḥ, v. 4163) Rudra (who is Brahman, Īva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, Prajāpati, etc.), having assumed the form of Varuṇa (cf. v. 4133, Varuṇaś, Pavandmakaś), performed a sacrifice to which came the munis and all the deities with Agni, etc.; the Lord of all himself poured libations into his own self. Seeing "devapatnyaś ca kanyāś ca devānāś caiva mātaraś," the seed (endowed with Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas) of Brahman fell upon the Earth; Pūshan took it up, and it was taken with the sacrificial ladle and poured as an oblation into the fire; thence Brahman caused the different beings to spring into existence. From the flames

(bhṛg) arose Bhṛgu, etc. . . . from the ashes, the Vaikhānasas, honoured by the ganas of brahmarshis; from his (Agni's, PCR.) tears, the Açvins; from his organs of sense (śrotobhyas B., i.e. ears, etc.), the rest of the Prajāpatis (prajānām patayaḥ), the Rāhis from his pores, etc. For this reason Agni is said to be all the deities; the pieces of wood are the months, etc.; his bile (pittam) is day and night (B. somewhat differently); "Raudraṃ lohityam ity āhur, lohitaṃ kanakam smṛtaṃ | tan Maitram iti vijñeyam, dhūmā ca Vānavaḥ smṛtāḥ" (v. 4130); the flames are the Rudras and Ādityas; the planets, stars, etc. (Nil.), are the charcoal; "ādikartā ca lokasya tat param brahma tad dhrucam | sarvakāmadam ity āhu, tad rahasyam urāo ha" (v. 4132). Bhṛgu was considered as the offspring of Varuṇa, Āngiras as that of Agni, Kavi as that of Brahmān; Bhṛgu, Āngiras, and Kavi were all of them prajānām patayaḥ; their offspring (v. 4144-52) are called Vārunāḥ, and Kavi and Bhṛgu, Vārunau. Agni is Brahmān, Paçupati, Sarva, Rudra, Prajāpati; gold is the offspring of Agni (v. 4164); when fire is not obtainable gold is used as a substitute by a Jamādagnyaḥ ("one that knows the identity of gold with fire," PCR.) Pramūṇajño eṣaḥ prutir-darçanāt (v. 4165), etc. (v. 4166-7); Agni sprang from Brahmān, and from Agni sprang gold (v. 4168); those persons observant of righteousness who make gifts of gold are regarded as giving away all the deities (v. 4169), etc.; he who makes a gift of gold at the second twilight succeeds in attaining to a residence with (sālokyam) Brahmān, Vāyu, Agni, and Soma (v. 4173), and in the regions of Indra (sandreshu oaiṇa lokeshu, v. 4174), etc.; he has never to fall down from the regions to which he attains (na ca ksharati lobhyaḥ ca, v. 4176). At last Indra himself directed the sacrifice. Indra told Marutta to offer a red bull consecrated to Agni, and a blue with a variegated skin to V.-D. (v. 285); 9, (227), (230), (232), (235), (240), (243), (246), (249).—§ 782b (Brāhmaṇagītā): 20, 608 (i.e. the vessel of the body called Piṅgalū, Nil.; cf. PCR.), 617 (Vaiçvānaro, the senses with manas and buddhi are his seven tongues).—§ 782 (Guru-çishya-s.): 42, 1167 (mahān ātma, i.e. the Emancipate, sa vai Viṣṇuḥ ca Mitrāḥ ca Varuṇo 'gniḥ Prajāpatiḥ | sa hi Dhātā Vidhātā ca . . .); 43, 1177 (Agni is dhātapatir nityam).—§ 784 (Utaṅkop.): 58, 1746 (the horse which Utaṅka saw in the Nāgaloka turned out to be Agni).—§ 789 (Putradarçanap.): XV, 31, 857 (er bhāgaṃ Dhṛṣṭadyumnam).—§ 793 (Mausalap.): XVI, 3, 60 (etasmāt Kṛṣṇasya oakram, ascended to heaven).—§ 794 (Mahāprasthānikap.): XVII, 1: Having heard about the slaughter of the Vṛṣṇis and the death of Kṛṣṇa, the five Pāṇḍavas with Draupadī and a dog set out to retire from the world. [Agniparābhava(h)] ("the defeat of Agni"), a part of Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan. § 255: I, 223, 8094-8156. Questioned by Janamejaya why Agni desired to consume the forest of Khāṇḍava, Vaiçampāyana related: It has been heard in the Purāṇa that King Çvetaki performed sacrifices so incessantly that his ṛtvijes left him, their eyes being afflicted with the continued smoke; he then had his sacrifice completed by other ṛtvijes. He then desired to perform another sacrifice, which should extend over 100 years. But he could not obtain any priests to assist him; they told him to apply to Rudra. He then went to Kailāsa, and by observing the most rigid austerities he prevailed upon Rudra that his sacrifice should be completed, on the condition that he could for twelve years without intermission pour libations of clarified butter into the fire, himself leading all the while the life of a brahmācārī. When this had been done Rudra said that he would not himself assist at the sacrifice, which properly belonged to the brahmins; but he caused Durvāsas (ḍ) to complete it. [When the time came Çvetaki ascended to heaven (Svarga) with the ṛtvijes and sadasyas who had helped him in life, B.] But Agni became sick, because he had drunk clarified butter for twelve years, and applied to Brahman. Brahman told him to consume the forest of Khāṇḍava, that abode of the enemies of the gods, which he had of old once burnt to ashes at the request of the gods, together with its living population; then he would regain his own nature. Seven times Agni, assisted by Vāyu, set the forest on fire; but the inhabitants extinguished the fire (the elephants bringing water in their trunks, and the Nāgas in their hoods, etc.) (I, 223).—§ 256: I, 224, 8157-8166a. Agni again applied to Brahman, who told him to solicit the old deities Nara and Nārāyaṇa (now Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa) to aid him.

[Aishikaparvan] ("the section relating to the Aishika weapon"), the 84th of the minor parvas of Mbhr., cf. Aishika. § 617: The driver of Dhṛṣṭadyumna's chariot, who had managed to escape from Kṛtavarma at a time when he was heedless, informs Yudhishtira, in the morning, of the extermination of his army. Yudhishtira falls down on the earth; Sātyaki holds him in his embrace; Bhīma, etc. (a), stretch forth their arms. Having recovered his senses Yudhishtira laments (β), and despatches Nakula to bring thither Draupadī and the ladies with her; then he proceeds to view the slaughter in his camp, and falls down on the earth with all his followers (X, 10). Draupadī arrives from Upaplavya, falls down in the presence of Yudhishtira, is comforted by Bhīma, addresses Yudhishtira (γ), and resolves to sit in Prāya, if the Pāṇḍavas do not slay Aṣvatthāman. Yudhishtira urged her to forget her sorrows, as Aṣvatthāman is not to be found. Draupadī insists on Aṣvatthāman's slaughter and the depredation of the gem on his head, appealing in particular to Bhīmasena (δ). Bhīmasena, making Nakula his charioteer, sets out in pursuit of Aṣvatthāman, guided by the track of the latter's car-wheels (X, 11). Kṛṣṇa urges Yudhishtira to make arrangements for the safety of Bhīma, as Aṣvatthāman has the Brahma-çiras (ε) weapon capable of exterminating all foes (X, 12). The Pāṇḍavas, with Kṛṣṇa, proceed on the track of Bhīmasena: Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Yudhishtira on Kṛṣṇa's car with steeds of the Kāmboja breed: Çaihya on the right, Sugrīva on the left, Meghapushpa and Balāhaka being pārshpivāhas, the standard having been made by Viçvakarman and standing high like Māyā, with Garuḍa. They in vain ask Bhīma to stop. They find Aṣvatthāman sitting with Vyāsa on the bank of Gaṅgā in the midst of many R.; he is attired in a piece of cloth made of Kuça-grass, etc. . . . He consecrates a blade of grass with Mantras, and converts it into that powerful celestial weapon, and throws it off with the words "for the destruction of the Pāṇḍavas" (X, 13). Urged by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna shoots the [Brāhma, PCR.] weapon imparted to him by Droṇa, which was capable of neutralizing all weapons. Extraordinary portents appear in nature. Nārada and Vyāsa, trying to save the three worlds, stand between the two fires (X, 14). Arjuna withdraws his weapon; but Aṣvatthāman is incapable of withdrawing his, as no person of uncleansed soul can bring it back, after it has once been let off, but only a brahmachārin (and such a one is Arjuna); otherwise it strikes off his own head. Vyāsa praises Arjuna for not having before used the Brahmaçiras weapon; "that region where Brahmaçiras is baffled by another high weapon, suffers a drought for twelve years"; he proposes to him to give the Pāṇḍavas the gem on his head; then the Pāṇḍavas would in return grant him his life. Aṣvatthāman surrenders his gem, whose wearer ceases to have any fear from weapons, etc., and from D., Dā., and N., and Rā.; the weapon he throws into the wombs of the Pāṇḍava women (X, 15). Kṛṣṇa says that a brahman at Upaplavya has said to Uttarā, "while the Kuru line will become extinct, a son will be born to thee, and he will for that reason be called Parikshit." Aṣvatthāman says that his words could not but be fulfilled. Kṛṣṇa says that the foetus will die, but be recalled to a long life; but Aṣvatthāman shall wander for 3000 years alone, and without being able to talk to anyone; the stench of pus and blood shall emanate from him, and inaccessible forests and dreary moors shall be his abode; he shall wander over the earth with the weight of all diseases on him. Parikshit shall learn the use of all weapons from Kṛpa and rule the earth for sixty years; Kṛṣṇa will revive him. Vyāsa approves of Kṛṣṇa's curse. Aṣvatthāman proceeds to the forest. The Pāṇḍavas with Kṛṣṇa, Vyāsa, and Nārada, taking with them the gem, come to Draupadī, who is sitting in Prāya. Bhīma comforts Draupadī (γ). Draupadī asks Yudhishtira to place upon his head the gem taken from Aṣvatthāman. Yudhishtira asks Kṛṣṇa (X, 16) about the true cause of Aṣvatthāman's success in destroying the Pāṇḍava army (θ). Kṛṣṇa ascribes it to the aid of Mahādeva, and relates that when Brahmān, desirous of creating, saw Rudra, he asked him to create living creatures; Rudra promised to do so, and plunged into the waters and practised austerities. Then Brahmān called into existence another being in order to make him the creator of living creatures, and he created Dakṣa, etc.; but they ran towards their creator from hunger, desirous of devouring him, and he repaired to Brahmān, who assigned herbs, etc., as their food, and the weak beings to the strong ones. The creatures multiplied. Then Rudra rose from the water, became angry, and caused his productive limb to disappear in the earth. He had created food (herbs and plants) for all these creatures. Then he went away, in cheerlessness and rage, to the Muñjavat mountains in order to practise severer austerities (X, 17). After the Kṛta-age the gods prepared a sacrifice, but not knowing Rudra truly they assigned no share to him. Rudra constructed a bow of two of the four kinds of sacrifices (v. the note of PCR., p. 58), and came as a brahmachārin to the sacrifice; the earth shrank with fear, etc.; Rudra pierced the sacrifice in the heart; it assumed the shape of a deer and fled away with Agni, pursued by Rudra through the skies; the gods were stupefied; Rudra with his bow broke the arms of Savitṛ and plucked out the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Pūshan; the gods uttered a cry; the string of his bow burst; the gods and the sacrifice gratified Rudra; he threw his wrath into the water; that wrath, assuming the form of fire, is always employed in consuming the water. He then gave unto Savitṛ his arms, to Bhaga his eyes, and to Pūshan his teeth, and restored the sacrifice. The gods assigned to him all the libations of clarified butter as his share (X, 18).

In the eleventh year Yudhishtira, advised by Bhīma, took leave of those regions, determining again to practise austerities on the mountain, when he had regained his kingdom; and after Lomaśa had returned to the abode of the gods, they with the brahmins proceeded along that very road, carried by Ghaṭotkaca and his followers, and advised also by Āraṇyaka (III, 176).—§ 449: Having crossed Kailāsa, they passed one night in the hermitage of king Vṛshaparvan (b), then one month at Badarī, seeing Kubera's (c) favourite lake (nalini), then crossing the land of Cina, Tushāra, Darada, and all the regions of Kulinda, and the difficult Himālaya regions, they reached the city of the Kirāta king Subāhu, where they met with their charioteers Viçoka, etc., and their servants Mahendrasena, etc., the cooks and servants of the kitchen. After having stayed there one night, they, dismissing Ghaṭotkaca and his followers, with the charioteers and chariots reached "the king of mountains" near Yamunā (Yamunam adirājam, i.e. Yamunodgamam, Nil.; "name of a mountain," BB.), where they dwelt for one year, occupied with hunting, in the forest Viçākhayūpa. There in a cavern Bhīma was seized by a snake and rescued by Yudhishtira. In the twelfth year of their exile they repaired thence to the borders of the desert, and desirous of dwelling by the Sarasvatī (d), they went there, and thence reached the lake of Dvaitavana (III, 177).—§ 450: At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana detailed how Bhīma, when they had come from the rājarshi Vṛshaparvan's hermitage, was hunting with unpoisoned (śuddhair) arrows on some spots of Himavat (e), was seized by a huge snake, and on account of a boon that had been granted to the serpent was quite unable to extricate himself (III, 178). The serpent said that he was the rājarshi Nahusha, the son of Āyu, whom Agastya had cursed to become a serpent, out of compassion, however, adding to his curse that the person who would be able to answer his questions would deliver him, and that even stronger beings would, when seized by him, lose their strength. He had retained his recollection of his former existence, and nobody who came within his reach at the sixth division of the day (? śaśṭhe kālē: aṣṭadhā vibhaktasyāhno bhāge, Nil.) could escape him. Bhīma lamented. Now appeared dreadful omens to Yudhishtira there, and having learnt from Draupadī that Bhīma had long been out, he set out with Dhaumya, having directed Arjuna to protect Draupadī, and Nakula and Sahadeva to protect the brahmins; and in the east, following the tracks of Bhīma, he came to the spot (III, 179). The serpent told Yudhishtira who he was, refused other food instead of Bhīma, but promised to deliver him if Yudhishtira could answer his questions. The first question was about the characteristics of the brāhman, etc. (III, 180). Yudhishtira asked the serpent some questions about the means of salvation, and some other moral and philosophical questions, about the difference between the mind (manas) and the intellect (buddhi), and what had caused Nahusha's fall. Nahusha told that in heaven he used to exact tribute from brahmins, gods, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Pannagus, etc.; and that such was the spell of his eyes, that on whatever creature he fixed them he instantly destroyed its power; Agastya had foretold that Yudhishtira would save him from his curse. He delivered Bhīma unhurt, and, assuming his celestial shape, went back to heaven. Yudhishtira returned with Dhaumya and Bhīma, and narrated all that to the brahmins, who censured Bhīma, and warned him against attempting such things again (III, 181).

[Ambopākhyānaparvan] ("the section containing the episode of Ambā," the 66th of the minor parvas of Mbhr. Cf. Ambopākhyāna). § 573. Questioned by Duryodhana why he would not slay Çikhaṇḍin, Bhishma said: After Çāntanu's death and Citrāṅgada's demise, obedient to the counsels of Satyawatī I installed, according to the ordinance, Vicitravirya as king. I repaired on a single car to the svayamvara of the daughters of the king of Kāçi: Ambā (the eldest), Ambikā (the second), and Ambālikā (the youngest), who were °vriyachalkāḥ. Challenging all the kings, I took the three maidens upon my car, and repeatedly told my name to the kings, and vanquished them all. Then I came back to Hāstinapura and made over those maidens, intending them for Vicitravirya, to Satyawatī (V, 173). Satyawatī became very glad. When the nuptials approached, Ambā said that she had before mentally chosen the Çālva king (the lord of Śaubha, v. 6076, etc.) as her lord, and that he, without her father's knowledge, had privately proposed to her (V, 174). I then laid the matter before Satyawatī and our counsellors (mantrin), °vijes, and °purohitas, and permitted Ambā to depart. She came to the city of the Çālva king, escorted by a number of old brahmins, accompanied by her nurse. But he would no longer have her as his wife, because she was to be wedded to another. It was of no avail that she declared she had been carried away by force, weeping and against her will; for Çālva was in terror of Bhishma. She cursed Bhishma, her father, herself (because she had not leapt down from Bhishma's car), Çālva, and Dhātṛ (the creator). She resolved that her vengeance should fall upon Bhishma. She repaired to a hermitage of ascetics (tāpasāḥ), and stayed there that night. There was the great brahman Çaikḥāvatya, a proceptor in the scriptures and the Āraṇyakas (çāstre cāraṇyake guruḥ) (V, 175). The ascetics counselled her to repair to her father's abode; but she would not, lest she should be alighted by her relatives; she wished to practise ascetic austerities. Then came her maternal grandfather, the Śrñjaya king, the R.-r. Hotravāhana, and advised her to go to Rāma Jāmadagnya, who would slay Bhishma in battle if Bhishma did not obey his behest; he always dwelt on the Mahendra mountain with R., G., and Aps. While they were speaking there appeared Akṛtavraṇa, a dear companion of Rāma; he said that Rāma would come the next morning to see Hotravāhana; Hotravāhana related the history of Ambā to Akṛtavraṇa (V, 176). The next day Rāma appeared with his disciples, his bow in hand, etc. (description). Ambā asked him to slay Bhishma (V, 177). Rāma said he would not take up arms except at the command of brahmins. Akṛtavraṇa supported the demand of Ambā. The next morning they all set out for Kurukshetra with the maiden, and quartered themselves on the banks of Sarasvatī. On the third day Rāma sent a message to Bhishma, who came and worshipped him. Rāma demanded that he should bestow Ambā upon Vicitravirya, which Bhishma refused. Rāma threatened to slay him in battle; Bhishma said that Rāma had himself taught him the four kinds of arms (iḥvastram caturvidham; see the note of PCR.); and quoted a çloka in the Purāṇa, sung by Marutta (v. 7074). Having first gone to Hāstinapura and represented everything to Satyawatī, Bhishma set out for Kurukshetra on his car (description). Gaṅgā ("worshipped by Si. and Cā," v. 7095) in vain endeavoured to make them desist (V, 178). Bhishma asked Rāma to mount on a chariot; but Rāma said that the earth was his chariot, the Vedas his steeds, the wind (Mātariçvan) his charioteer, and the mothers of the Vedas (Vedamātaraḥ; see the note of PCR.) his harness. Bhishma saw him stationed on an excellent car (description), with Akṛtavraṇa as his charioteer. Bhishma propitiated Rāma by worshipping him, on foot. The combat lasted for many days; at last Bhishma, from pity and reverence, would not strike Rāma any longer, and the combat ceased at sunset (V, 179). Next morning the battle was taken up again. Bhishma's Vāyavya weapon was neutralized by Rāma's Gubhyaka; Bhishma's Āgneya by Rāma's Vāruṇa. At a momentary swoon of Bhishma, Akṛtavraṇa, Ambā, etc., were filled with joy; then Rāma fell into a swoon and dropped down; the ascetics and Ambā comforted him. A conflagration was caused in the welkin. At evening Rāma withdrew (V, 180). The next day they fought again, and at evening they desisted (V, 181). The next day Bhishma's charioteer was slain; Bhishma, pierced by an arrow, fell down to the earth; eight brahmins supported him on their arms in mid-air; Gaṅgā was seen on his car; she had controlled his steeds in the combat. Bhishma dismissed her and fought till evening. When Rāma for a moment lost his consciousness, Rāhu enveloped the sun, etc. At evening the battle ceased; next day it was taken up again, and lasted for twenty-three days (V, 182). During the night the above-mentioned eight brahmins appeared to Bhishma in a dream, comforted him, and said that the weapon Prusvāpa (Prājāpatyaṃ Viçvakṛtam, v. 7259; PCR., "appertaining to the lord of all creatures and forged by the divine artificer") would come to his knowledge, for it had been known to him in his former life; neither Rāma nor any person on earth was acquainted with it; Rāma would not be slain by it, but he would fall asleep; "then thou wilt awaken him with the weapon Sambodhana" (V, 183). Next day Akṣavraṇa must comfort Rāma. Bhīshma and Rāma both used the Brāhma weapon; the welkin seemed to be ablaze, and D., A., R., G., and Rā. were greatly afflicted, etc. Then the mantras for using the Prasvāpa weapon suddenly came to Bhīshma's mind (V, 184). Voices in the sky (the gods) and Nārada forbade him to let off the Prasvāpa weapon against Rāma, and the above-mentioned brahmins supported the words of Nārada. Beholding the Prasvāpa weapon withdrawn, Rāma declared himself to be vanquished. Rāma then beheld before him his father and father's father, who forbade him any more to fight with kshatriyas, especially with Bhīshma, whom the gods forbade to fight with Rāma. "Arjuna has been ordained by Svayambhū to be the slayer of Bhīshma." The ascetics with Roṭka, Nārada, Gaṅgā, and the Pitṛs succeeded in bringing about peace; the above-mentioned eight brahmins ordered Bhīshma to go to Rāma, who, summoning Ambā, said (V, 185) that he could do no more for her. Ambā went away, resolved to devote herself to austerities, that she might herself slay Bhīshma. Rāma with the ascetics departed for the Mahendra mountain; Bhīshma entered Hāstinapura, and was blessed by Satyawatī, and he appointed spies to ascertain the doings of Ambā. Bhīshma became afflicted when he heard that she was resolved on ascetic austerities (description), but was consoled by Nārada and Vyāsa. After having lived for six months on air she stood a year in the waters of Yamunā, etc., and thus went on for twelve years. She then went into Vatsabhūmi (resorted to by Si. and Cā.), etc. (a). Gaṅgā, angry because she observed these vows for the destruction of Bhīshma, cursed her, saying that after death she would become a river crooked in her course, etc. When Ambā once more came back to Vatsabhūmi she there became the above-mentioned river, but in consequence of her ascetic merit, only with half her body, while as to the other half she remained a maiden as before (V, 186). To the ascetics in Vatsabhūmi she said that she was resolved to obtain manhood in order to be revenged on Bhīshma. Īva appeared in his own form in the midst of those great ṛshis, and premised her that she would slay Bhīshma and even obtain manhood, and in a new body remember all the incidents; born in the race of Drupada, she would become a mahāratha. Then Īva disappeared. Ambā burnt herself on the bank of the Yamunā in the very sight of those great Ṛshis (V, 187). Questioned by Duryodhana how Īkhaṇḍin, having before been born a girl, afterwards became a man, Bhīshma related: The eldest queen of king Drupada was childless. During those years Drupada worshipped Čaṅkara for the sake of offspring, resolving to bring about Bhīshma's destruction, and practising the austere of penances. He begged Īva for a son; Īva said he should have a child who would be both female and male. In due time the queen conceived (as told by Nārada), and gave birth to a daughter, whom Drupada gave out for a son, and called her Īkhaṇḍin. Bhīshma alone, from his spies and from Nārada, knew the truth (V, 188). In arrows and weapons she became a disciple of Droṇa. They afterwards wedded her to the daughter of the Daśarṇa king Hiranyavarman, quite assured that the words of Īva would become true. Īkhaṇḍin, after marriage, came back to Kāmpilya. At the discovery of Īkhaṇḍin's sex a war was about to break out with Hiranyavarman (V, 189). Drupada was not naturally courageous, and became filled with fear, and, in the presence of others, asked his queen about the truth (though he knew everything) (V, 190). The queen said that, childless as she was, when her daughter Īkhaṇḍin was born she had, from fear of her co-wives, told Drupada that it was a son, remembering the words of Īva. Drupada prepared for war, and, with the queen, prayed to the gods. Īkhaṇḍin went to a forest, the haunt of the powerful Yaksha (Guhyaka, v. 7480) Sthūpākarna, who was a follower of Kubera, resolved on putting an end to her own life. Repeatedly requested by Sthūpākarna to ask a boon, she told him the matter, and wished to become a man, as long as Hiranyavarman had not left the city (V, 191). He gave her his manhood and took her womanhood for a certain period, i.e. till Hiranyavarman should have departed. Īkhaṇḍin went home and informed Drupada, who with his wife recollected the words of Īva. Hiranyavarman sent a brahman as an envoy to Kāmpilya, threatening to exterminate Drupada with his counsellors, sons, etc. Drupada sent a brahman as his envoy to Hiranyavarman, maintaining that Īkhaṇḍin was a male; "let it be made clear by means of witnesses; somebody has spoken falsely to thee." Hiranyavarman despatched a number of young ladies for ascertaining it, and they attested that he was a male. Hiranyavarman then passed some days with Drupada in gladness, gave much wealth to Īkhaṇḍin, and then departed, having rebuked his daughter. Kubera, hearing the matter from the Yakshas, cursed Sthūpākarna, saying that his femininity should remain as it was; as the Yakshas began to soften him, he set a limit to the curse, i.e. Īkhaṇḍin's death. When Īkhaṇḍin came to redeem his pledge, Sthūpākarna related his curse and let him go. Drupada gave Īkhaṇḍin as a pupil to Droṇa, who taught him the fourfold (catuṣpādā) Dhanurveda, along with the Dhātaraśṭras and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. It was Ambā who had been born as Īkhaṇḍin. Bhīshma had made a vow not to shoot weapons against a woman, or one that had before been a woman, or one bearing a feminine name, or one whose form resembled that of a woman (V, 192). Duryodhana asked in what time Bhīma, etc. (a), could annihilate the hostile army. Bhīshma said he could do it in a month; Droṇa said the same; Kṛpa mentioned two months; Aśvatthāman, ten nights; Karna, five nights. Bhīshma ridiculed Karna, saying that he will think otherwise when he had encountered Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa (V, 193). Having learnt this from his spies, Yudhishtira asked Arjuna the same question. Arjuna said that with Kṛṣṇa as his ally he could exterminate the three worlds with the gods, etc., in the twinkling of an eye; the weapon given him by Paṇupati (i.e. Īva) as a hunter (Kairāṭa dvandvayuddhe), which Paṇupati used at the end of the yuga for destroying created things, was not known to Bhīshma, etc. (b); he enumerated Yudhishtira's allies (c); Yudhishtira was himself competent to exterminate the three worlds (V, 194). Next morning, under a cloudless sky, the Kaurava army marched (description) to the field, first Vinda, etc. (d); Aśvatthāman, etc. (e), in the second division; in the rear, Kṛṣṇavarman, etc. (f), with the Dhātaraśṭras at their head. Duryodhana's encampment (description) looked like a second Hāstinapura (V, 195). In the same way Yudhishtira also ordered out his troops, headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna, under Dhṛṣṭaketu, etc. (g), (description); first Abhimanyu, etc. (h); then Bhīma and Arjuna in the second division; last of all himself with Virāṭa and Drupada, etc. Then he disposed his divisions in a different order, confounding the Dhārtarāshṭras: the Draupadeyas, etc. (c), under Bhīmasena; in the middle division, Virāṭa, etc. (x); in that part where Yudhiṣṭhira himself was, Cekitāna, etc. (λ). Yudhiṣṭhira was followed by Saucitti, etc. (μ), (V, 196).

Amṛtāvatāraṇa (the three first chapters of Sambhavadparvan, I, 65-7). § 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 368 (B. has °tā°).—§ 289 (Arghāharanap.): II, 36, 1317 (Amṛtāvataraṇa yā 'sau Brahmaṇo bhavane, i.e. 'bhavat').

[Amṛtāvataraṇa(m)] ("incarnations"), comprehends the three first chapters of Sambhavadparvan (vii), i.e. I, 65-67. § 85: Conformably to the consultation held between Indra and Nārāyaṇa, the celestials were born in the lines of brahmarshis and rājmarshis, and they slew the Dānavas, Rā., G., and Snakes, etc. Janamejaya desired to hear, from the beginning, of the births of D., Dā., G., Aps., men, Y., and Rā.—§ 86: The six spiritual sons of Brahman; Kaçyapa.—§ 87: The thirteen daughters of Daksha (v. 2520, read Prādhā with B. and V., and v. 2554).—§ 88: The Ādityāḥ (Vishnu, the youngest and superior to them all).—§ 89: Diti's son Hiranyakaçipu and his five sons.—§ 90: Prahlāda's three sons.—§ 91: Virocana—Bali—Bāṇa (a follower of Rudra and called also Mahākāla).—§ 92: Forty sons of Danu (only thirty-two are enumerated, amongst them Sūrya-Candramasau, "not to be confounded with the gods of the same name").—§ 93: Ten more races (vamçāḥ) of Danu-putrāḥ.—§ 94: Siphikā's four sons (Rāhu, etc.).—§ 95: Offspring of Krūrā (i.e. Krodhā, gaṇaḥ Krodhavaçanāma, not otherwise enumerated).—§ 96: The four sons of Danāyus.—§ 97: The offspring of Kālā (the Kālakeyāḥ; only four enumerated; instead of "Krodhāḥ çatruḥ" read with B. "Krodhāçatruḥ").—§ 98: The upādhyāya of the Asuras was Çukra or Uçana, son of a rahi; he had four sons who sacrificed for the Asuras (Tvaçṭā—so BR.—Dharas tathātriç ca dāu [?] anyau raudrakarmīṇau; ought we not to read Jaṭādhara or something of the sort? PCR. has: Tvaçṭādhara . . . Raudra and Kermin); they were Brahmaloka-parāyagāḥ. This progeny of the Asuras and gods is related in the Purāṇa.—§ 99: The six Vainateyāḥ.—§ 100: The six Kādraveyāḥ.—§ 101: The sixteen Devagandharvā Mauneyāḥ.—§ 102: The eight daughters of Prādhā and the ten Devagandharvāḥ Prādheyāḥ.—§ 103: Enumeration of thirteen Apsarasas, daughters of Prādhā and the Devarshi (i.e. Kaçyapa).—§ 104: The four Gandharvasattamāḥ, apparently sons of Prādhā.—§ 105: Amṛtam, brāhmaṇa gāro Gandharvāpsarasas tathā | apatyam Kapi-lāyā tu Purāṇa parikīrtitam.—§ 106: "Thus I have told you about the birth of all creatures: of Gandharvas, Apsarasas, Snakes, Suparṇas, R., and M., etc."* (I, 65).—§ 107: Brahmaṇo mānasāḥ putrā viditāḥ śaṇ maharshayaḥ.—§ 108: The Rudras, sons of Sthānu.—§ 109: Enumeration of the six maharshis (cf. § 86).—§ 110: The three sons of Āngiras.—§ 111: Atri's many sons (not enumerated) were perfect (siddhāḥ) maharshis.—§ 112: Pulastya's offspring were Rā., the monkeys, K., and Y.—§ 113: Pulaha's offspring were the Çalabhas, the lions, Kp., the tigers, Y. (PCR. reads apparently "rkṣa," i.e. bears), and wolves.—§ 114: Kratu's sons were the companions of the Sun (Paṇḍasahacāriṇaḥ, i.e. the Vālikhilyas; so Nil. and PCR.).—§ 115: The rahi Prajāpati Daksha sprang from the right toe of Brahman, and Daksha's wife from the left toe of Brahman; he had lost his sons (nashṭaputraḥ, v. § 138), but had fifty daughters, whom he made his putrikāḥ; he bestowed ten of them on Dharma, twenty-seven on Iḍu (i.e. the Moon), thirteen on Kaçyapa. Enumeration of the ten wives of Dharma (dvarāṇy etāni Dharmasya vihitāni Svayambhuvā). The twenty-seven wives of Soma are all junction-stars of the nakshatras (nakshatra-yoginyāḥ, VP. ii, p. 28; cf. BR. s.v., and Sūrya-Si°, ch. viii; not enumerated).—§ 116: The Vasus (q.v.) with their mothers and sons and grandsons, etc.; especially Kumāra (d), Prabhūsa (e), Viçvakarman (d).—§ 117: Dharma, assuming a human body, came out through the right breast of Brahman. His three sons and their wives.—§ 118: From Marici's son Kaçyapa sprang the gods and Asuras, "lokāṇām prabhavas tu saḥ".—§ 119: Tvāṣṭri, the wife of Savitr, in the form of a mare, gave birth to the Açvins in the skies.—§ 120: The sons of Aditi are twelve (not enumerated); the youngest of them is Vishnu, upon whom the worlds are dependent.—§ 120 bis: "trayaçtriṇçala ity ete devā—i.e. eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, twelve Ādityas, Prajāpati, and Vashatkāra" (Nil.). "tesāṃ ahaṃ tava | anvaçam sampravakṣyāmi pakṣaiç ca kulato gaṇān || Rudrāṇām aparāḥ pakṣaḥ Sadhyāṇām Maruṭāṇām tathā | Varuṇām Bhārgavaṇām vidyād Viçvedevāṇām tathāiva ca || Vainateyas tu Garuḍo balavān Aruṇas tathā | Brhaspatiç ca bhagavān Ādityeṣu eva gaṇyate || Açvinau Guhyakān viddhi sarvaushadhyas tathā paçān | ete devagāṇā, rājan, kīrtitās te 'nuparveçāḥ || yān kīrtayitvā manuṣāḥ sarvapāpāḥ pramuçyate".—§ 121: Bhṛgu came out ripping open the heart of Brahman. Bhṛgu's son was Kavi, and Kavi's son was the planet Çukra (or do Kavi, Kaviputra, and Çukra signify one and the same person, which seems to be the opinion of PCR.), who was appointed by Svayambhū to give and withhold rain, and to inflict and remit calamities, and who by the power of asceticism (yogādāryo) became the guru both of the Daityas and of the gods.—§ 122: As he (Çukra) was thus employed by Vidhi (i.e. Brahman) in seeking welfare (yogakṣemāya), Bhṛgu begat Cyavana, who, falling out of his mother's womb through anger, released her (cf. § 20). Cyavana's wife was Ārushī, daughter of Manu; their son Aurva came out ripping open the thigh of Ārushī.

the gums of various trees and herbs mingled with the waters of the Ocean, and the milky water produced clarified butter, but even then the Amṛta did not appear. The gods were tired and repaired to Brahman, who prevailed upon Nārāyaṇa to grant the gods new strength to churn afresh. After a while the Moon, ̐ṛi, Surādevī (wine), Uccaiḥśravas, and Kaustubha came forth on the side of the gods; then Dhanvantari with a white vessel of Amṛta in his hand; then Airāvata, and at last the poison Kālakūṭa, that ̐iva, solicited by Brahman, swallowed for the safety of the creation; from that time ̐iva is called Nīlakaṇṭha ('Blue-neck'). The Asuras preparing to rob the gods of ̐ṛi and the Amṛta, Nārāyaṇa, assisted by his māyā ('illusion'), assumed a ravishing female form; the Dānavas and Daityas were infatuated, and placed the Amṛta in her hands (I, 18). While the Daityas and Dānavas pursued the gods, Viṣṇu with Nara let the gods drink of the Amṛta; the Dānava Rāhu also drank of it in the disguise of a god, but was discovered by Sūrya (i.e. the Sun) and Soma (i.e. the Moon); then Nārāyaṇa instantly seized his discus and cut off his head, which to this day swallows Sūrya and Soma. In a dreadful battle on the shores of the salt-water sea the gods, headed by Nārāyaṇa with his discus Sudarṣana and Nara with his celestial bow, discomfited the Asuras, who entered the bowels of the earth or plunged into the sea of salt waters. The gods replaced Mandara on its own base, and, headed by Indra, they entrusted the keeping of the vessel of Amṛta to Kīrtiṇ (i.e. Nara), (I, 19).

Amṛtāṃcūdbhava = Viṣṇu (1000 names).

Amṛtapa¹, a Dānava. § 93 (Amṛtāvat.): I, 65, 2537 (Danuputra).

Amṛtapa² = Viṣṇu (1000 names).

Amṛtapā = ̐iva (1000 names¹).

Amṛtavapus = Viṣṇu (1000 names).

Amṛteçaya: XII, 12864 (Mahāpurushastava).

Āngirasa(ṃ) ("on the descendants of Āngiras"). § 488 (Mārka.): Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related the following "old story" (itihāsaṃ purāṇanam): Āngiras (the third son of Brahmān, v. 14122) in days of yore practised austerities in his hermitage, so that he excelled Agni, who, thinking that Brahmān had created a new Fire, was greatly depressed, but Āngiras, saying that Agni had been created by Brahmān to officiate as fire, asked him to occupy his proper place, and when Agni only wished to be the second or *Prajā-pati*ya fire, at last prevailed upon him to remain and make him (i.e. Āngirasa) his first son. Āngirasa also had a son, Brhaspati; knowing him the Āngirasa to be the firstborn son of Fire, the gods came and learned the matter from Āngirasa (III, 217).—§ 489: The children of Āngirasa and Çubha (B. Subha): the son Brhaspati, and the eight daughters, Bhānumati, Rāgā, Sinibālī, also called Kapardinūtā, because she was both visible and invisible, Aroishmati, Havishmati, Mahishmati, Mahāmāti, and Kuhā (III, 218).—§ 490:

§ 491: With Kāçyapa, Vāsishṭha, Prāna, son of Prāna, Agni Āngirasa,|| and Cyavana Trisuvarcaka,|| he,§ after a penance lasting for many years, obtained the son Pāñcajanya ("appertaining to five men and the progenitor of five tribes," v. 14160). Pāñcajanya (= Tapas, v. 14166-8, 14173, 14174), after 10,000 years of penances, produced the fire of the Pitṛs; from his head he created Brhat and Rathantara, from his mouth Vāta and Rasāhara,¶ in his navel Çiva, from his might (balād) Indra, from his soul (prāṇato) Vāyu and Agni, from his arms Anudātta, and Viçvo†† (!) and the elements (bhātāni), and then the five sons of the Pitṛs. Brhadratha's son was Prañidhi, Kāçyapa's Mahattara, Āngirasa's Bhānu, Vareca's Saubhara, and Prāna's Anudātta, in all twenty-five. —§ 492: He also produced three times five devāḥ: Yajñamushaḥ ("who steal the sacrifices"), Subhima, Atibhima, Bhīma, Bhīmabala, Abala, Sumitra, Mitravat, Mitrajña,

* We are not told in the text whose son Niçyavana is. He might be the second son of Brhaspati, and that is apparently the opinion of Nil. and PCR.

† It is not said in the text whose son he is. PCR. takes Nishkṛti to be another name of Satya.

‡ PCR. supposes Viçvajit to be Brhaspati's third son, Viçvabhuj the fourth, Vadavāgni the fifth, Urdhvabhāj the same as Vadavāgni, Śvishṭakṛt the sixth son of Brhaspati, Manyu (fury) as predicate to Manyanti, "daughter of Prajāpati," Svāhā the same as Manyanti; Kāma, Amogha, and Uktha the sons of Svāhā, by satten, rajas, and tamas respectively; Mahavāc to mean "the great word, i.e. the word of God," and Samūçvāsa ("the means of rest") as epithet of Uktha.

|| Nil. and PCR. takes "agnir Āngirasaçceira" to be an epithet of Cyavana, and Suvarcaka (sic!) to stand alone as the fifth name.

§ I.e. Uktha, according to Nil. and PCR.

¶ Otherwise PCR. and Nil.

Mitravardhana, Mitradharmā,* Surapravira, Vira, Suvoca, Suravarcas, and "Surāṇam api hanti".—§ 493: Brhaduktha and Rathantara (cf. § 491) or Mitravinda, sons of Tapas (III, 220). Many "fires" enumerated, among others the five Urjaskarāḥ (Purandara, Ushman, Manu, Çambhu, and Avasathya), sons of Tapas; the six sons of Bhānu with his wives Suprajā and Brhadbhāsa Sūryajā (Balada, Manyumat, Viçhu = Dhrtimat = Āngirasa, Āgrayana, Agraha, Stubha). Niçā was likewise the wife of Bhānu, and gave birth to one daughter, to Agni and Soma, and to five Fires (Pavakān). The Fire (Pavaka) who in company with Parjanya is honoured with the first havis at the *Cāturmāsya*s is Agni Viçvānara. He who is called the lord of all the world is Viçvapati, the second son of Manu, etc. (III, 221). Genealogy of the Fires continued. The Fire Saha, from fear of his grandson the Fire Bharata (Bhara, Niyata), who burns the dead bodies, hid himself in the sea,† asking Atharvan to carry the oblations to the gods. When his place of concealment had been divulged by the fishes, Saha cursed them, saying that they should become the food of all creatures in various ways. Then Saha gave up his body and entered the earth, where he created various metals: from his pus (pāyāt) force (tejaḥ) and scent, from his bones the devadāru, from his phlegm glass (aphāṭikam), from his bile māvakata, from his liver the black iron, the clouds from his nails, the corals from his veins, etc., and remained absorbed in meditation, whence he was roused by the tapas of Bhṛgu, Āngirasa, etc. Seeing the ṛṣhi (i.e. Atharvāṅgirasa, Nil. = Atharvan, PCR.), he again took refuge in the water. The whole world with the gods sought the protection of Atharvan, who searched the sea, and finding the Fire, created the worlds (so Nil. and PCR.). So Agni was formerly destroyed by Atharvan, and called back (ahataḥ (¶), PCR.) he carries the oblations, and travelling about various countries and living there (i.e. in the sea, PCR.), he produced the various fires mentioned in the Vedas.—§ 494: Enumeration of rivers that are said to be the mothers of the fires. The wife of Adbhuta was Priyā, and his son Vibhārasi (14234). There are as many somas (i.e. kinds of soma sacrifices, Nil. and PCR.) as the number of fires mentioned. Also in the race of Atri [these] mind-born sons of Brahmānu (?)‡ sprang forth. Atri, wishing to procreate sons, conceived these [fires] in his mind, and the fires came out of his, the brahman's, body.|| The powers of these fires are the same as those of the Adbhuta fire as related in the Vedas, for they are all one and the same, the first Āngirasa, sprung from [his] body in various forms like the vyotishṭoma sacrifice (III, 222).

Suspicion had fallen upon him, because thieves had hid their plunder in his hermitage, while he was sitting for years with his arms upraised observing the vow of silence. When impaled, he by his ascetic power not only preserved his life, but summoned other ṛṣhis to the scene, who came in the night in the shape of birds (I, 107). Hearing that he was alive, the king asked his pardon and endeavoured to extract the stake from his body, but was obliged to cut it off outside the body. Māṇḍavya henceforth walked about with the stake in his life, and thereby conquered *loka*s unattainable by others and was called Animāṇḍavya (v. 4329). He ruled that an act should not be sinful when committed by one below the age of 14 years (I, 108).

Yudhishtira became consoled (XIII, 1).—§ 720:

Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira if any householder had ever succeeded in conquering Mṛtyu by virtue, Bhīṣma recited the ancient story Sudarśanopākhyāna (b), "To a householder there is no higher divinity than the guest; the blessings of an honoured guest are more efficacious than the merit of 100 sacrifices. Whenever a deserving guest seeks the hospitality of an householder and is not honoured by him, he takes away [with him] all the virtues of the latter, giving him his sins [in return]." Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 2).—§ 721: Yudhiṣṭhira asked how the Kaśattriya Viçvāmitra became a brahman, mentioning his destroying of the 100 sons of Vasiṣṭha, etc. (a), and comparing the instance of Matanga, who was born as a Caṇḍāla and could not attain to brahmanhood (XII, 3). Bhīṣma related how in olden times Viçvāmitra attained to the position of a brahman and B.-r, i.e. Viçvāmītropākhyāna (b), (XIII, 4).—§ 722: Yudhiṣṭhira wished to know the merits of compassion and the characteristics of devout men. Bhīṣma recited the ancient story of the discourse between Indra and the parrot (in the territories of the Kaśi king) who did not desert the blasted tree wherein it had been born, though the tree had withered, being pierced by a Fowler with a poisoned arrow. The parrot, by his penances, knew Indra (who came in the shape of a brahman), and, being granted a boon, made Indra revive the tree; and after death he came to the region of Indra (XIII, 5).—§ 723: Yudhiṣṭhira enquired which of the two, Exertion and Destiny, is more powerful. Bhīṣma related the ancient story of the conversation of Vasiṣṭha and Brahmdn, in which Brahmdn showed the necessity of exertion, notwithstanding the force of destiny, under reference to the example of the gods, etc. (a); Janamejaya, who followed in the footsteps of Indra, was checked and put down by the gods on account of his having killed a brahman woman; the viprarshi Vaiçampāyana was put down by the gods for killing a brahman by ignorance and a child (XIII, 6).—§ 724: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma related the various fruits of various good acts. The Kuru princes became filled with wonder at his doctrine, as narrated by R. of old (XIII, 7). Yudhiṣṭhira enquired who should be honoured and who liked, etc.; Bhīṣma's answer about the duty of honouring good brahmans (XIII, 8).—§ 725: Yudhiṣṭhira's enquiry about the misery that awaits those who refuse to make gifts to brahmans after having promised to give them. Bhīṣma set forth the various kinds of misery that await such men, citing the old narrative of the discourse between a jackal and an ape: While both were human beings they were intimate friends; after death one of them became a jackal and the other an ape, the former because he had not given to a brahman what he had promised to give, the latter because he used to appropriate the fruits belonging to brahmans. Bhīṣma had heard this from his preceptor and from Kṛṣṇa (XIII, 9).—§ 726: Yudhiṣṭhira wished to know whether any fault is incurred by one who gives instruction to a person belonging to a low caste. Bhīṣma recited what he had heard certain R. say in days of yore: instruction should not be imparted to one that belongs to a low or mean caste. He related the following instance that occurred in days of old: There was a sacred hermitage on the Himavat, inhabited by Śi., Cā., Palakhyas, etc. (description). A Çūdra asked the head of the college (kulapati) to initiate him into a life of renunciation, but he was refused. He then, at some distance, made a hut, etc., for himself, and began to live according to rigid vows, made sacrifices to the gods, etc. (description).

A. R. used to come to him, and, at his request, promised to assist him in Pitṛ-yajña. As the Çūdra placed the [stool called] bṛat towards the south with its head turned towards the west, R. told him to place the bṛat with its head turned towards the east, and to sit with his face turned towards the north, and gave him all directions about the çrāddha as laid down in the ordinances, and after the rites had been accomplished R. returned to his own abode. After a long time the Çūdra ascetic met with his death in those woods, and in his next life took birth in the family of a great king; the R. in his next life took birth in the family of a priest, and became well versed in the Atharvaveda, etc. (a); the reborn Çūdra was installed king after his father's death. He appointed the reborn R. as his priest, and ruled his kingdom righteously; but every day, when he saw his priest, he smiled or laughed. The priest made him swear to tell him the truth, and he was then informed by him about their former births, where the penances of R. had all been frustrated by the instruction he had given to the Çūdra. In order that he might not obtain a still lower birth in his next life, he caused him to relinquish his present office as priest, make gifts, and observe vows, repairing to many sacred places, and at last, his soul having become purified, living in that very asylum where he had lived in his former birth, practising very severe penances; thus he succeeded in attaining to the highest success (XIII, 10).—§ 727: Yudhiṣṭhira enquired after the nature of the man or the woman in whom the goddess of Prosperity always dwells. Bhīṣma related the conversation between Rukmiṇi (the mother of Pradyumna with the Makara banner) and the goddess Çri, whom she once asked this question in the presence of Devaki's son (XIII, 11).—§ 728: Yudhiṣṭhira enquired which of the two, man or woman, derives the greater pleasure from sexual union. Bhīṣma told the old story of the discourse between Bhaṅgāsavana and Çakra, i.e. Bhaṅgāsavanopākhyāna (b), (XIII, 12).—§ 729: Yudhiṣṭhira asked how one should act in order to live happily both here and hereafter; Bhīṣma's answer indicating the chief duties of commission and omission (XIII, 13).—§ 730: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed about the different names of Mahādeva and his puissance, but soon caused Kṛṣṇa to take up the topic before the conclave of R. with Vyāsa, just as R. Tanḍin, the offspring of Brahmdn, had in days of yore told the 1,000 names of Mahādeva before Brahmdn in Brahmaloka. "After twelve years had expired from the time when Pradyumna (the son of Rukmiṇi) slew the Asura Çambara in days of yore, my spouse Jāmbavatī (seeing the sons of Rukmiṇi—Pradyumna, Çarudeshṇa, etc.) asked me to grant her a heroic son, saying: 'By worshipping Mahādeva for twelve years and emaciating thyself in observing vows, thou hast begotten the sons Çarudeshṇa, etc., with Rukmiṇi (a).' She prayed that Brahmdn, etc. (b), would protect me; I took leave of Ahuka, etc. (c), and Garuḍa bore me to Himavat, where I dismissed him; I there saw the asylum (description) of Upamanyu Vaiyāghrapadya, revered by D., G., and K., adorned with Gaṅgā, etc. Upamanyu directed me to devote myself to penances and gratify Çiva, here where D. and R. had in days of yore gratified him, who took his birth as Dā. Hiraṇyakaçipu (b), who was the father of Mandara (c), irresistible even to Viṣṇu's discus Sudarśana (d); Çiva had further granted boons to the Dānavas (or Asuras) Vidyutprabha (e), Çatamukha (f), and to Brahmdn, etc. (g); the sacrifice Saptakapala, etc. (h).

Having narrated his former relations to Mahādeva, Upamanyu (g) there pointed out to me Si., R., V.-D., Y., G., Aps., etc., and said that in the sixth month from that time I should behold Mahādeva and obtain twenty-four boons from him and Uṃā. He gave me certain mantras, by reciting which I was sure to behold Ṣaṅkara. On the eighth day I underwent the dīkṣā, etc. (description); for one month I lived on fruits, etc.; then I beheld Mahādeva (description) and Uṃā in a cloud (description), surrounded by 1,100 Rudras, etc., praised by Ā., V., V.-D., A., Indra, etc. (w), uttered the Rathanlara Sāman in the presence of Bhava (Çiva). Innumerable masters of Yoga, etc. (aa), were bowing down to him; Sanatkumāra, etc. (ββ), were beheld by me standing there in their bodily forms; Lp., etc. (γγ), were seen to bow down to Çiva; G. and Aps. sang and hymned him; V.-D., etc. (δδ), were adoring him in thought, word, and deed; Brahmān, Çakra, etc., looked at me; I, however, had not the power to look at Mahādeva. I saluted Mahādeva: 'Thou art,' etc. (εε). Çiva roared like a lion; the innumerable brahmins there present, etc. (ζζ), bowed down to Çiva. Çiva, looking at Uṃā, Indra, and myself, told me to ask for eight boons" (XIII, 14). Kṛṣṇa went on to enumerate the eight boons, including hundreds upon hundreds of children and (granted by Uṃā in the name of Çiva) a son Çāmba. "Uṃā also granted me eight boons" (including 100 sons), "and said that I should have 16,000 wives, etc.; and that 7,000 guests would daily feed at my palace. Then Çiva and Uṃā disappeared with their gaṇas. All this I related to Upamanyu" (XIII, 15). Upamanyu said: There was in the Kṛta age a R. Taṇḍi who devoutly adored the god [Çiva] for 10,000 years. He succeeded in beholding Mahādeva and praised him (ηη), and further said: Neither Brahmān, etc. (θθ), know thee. Çiva said that Taṇḍi should be imperishable and eternal, etc., and his son become the author of Sātras, etc., and granted him a boon. Taṇḍi said: Let my devotion to thee be steady. Then the god disappeared. Then Taṇḍi came to my (i.e. Upamanyu's) asylum and told me all that had happened to him. Dost thou hear all those celebrated names [of Mahādeva] that Taṇḍi said unto me. Brahmān had at one time enumerated 10,000 names of Mahādeva; in the scriptures 1,000 names of him occur. They are not known to all, but were uttered in days of yore by Brahmān for the purpose of adoring Çiva. Having acquired them by the favour of Brahmān, Taṇḍi communicated them to me (XIII, 16). Kṛṣṇa said: "B.-r. Upamanyu said: I shall adore [Çiva] with names uttered by Brahmān, R., in the Vedas and Vedāṅgas, applied by Taṇḍi, etc. [i.e. Mahādeva-sahasra-nāma-stotra]." Blessing upon the reader; "Dā., Y., Rā., Pç., Yatudhāna, and Gh. can do no injury to him" (XIII, 17). Vyāsa told Yudhiṣṭhira to gratify Çiva with this hymn consisting of 1,008 names; Vyāsa had himself recited it in former days, when engaged in penances on Meru in order to obtain a son, and he had obtained the fulfilment of all his wishes. After this Kapila, etc. (u), obtained boons from Çiva. Then [Rāma] Jamadagnya, etc. (κκ), narrated to Yudhiṣṭhira the boons they had been granted by Çiva. Vaiṣampāyana continued: Hearing these marvellous feats of Mahādeva related by the ascetics, Yudhiṣṭhira became amazed. Then Kṛṣṇa said to Yudhiṣṭhira: Upamanyu said to me: Unrighteous men, stained by Rajas and Tamas, do not succeed in attaining to Īçāna (Çiva); even if a person lives in the enjoyment of every pleasure and luxury, yet he comes to be regarded as the equal of pure-minded forest recluses if he is devoted to the Supreme Deity; if Rudra is pleased with a person, he can confer upon him the position of either Brahmān or Kṛṣṇa or Çakra with all the deities under him, or the sovereignty of the three worlds; a person who devastates the whole universe does not become stained with sin if he adores and worships Çiva. . . . Then Kṛṣṇa said to Yudhiṣṭhira: Āditya, etc. (λλ), have sprung from that creator of all creatures (Çiva); indeed, that subtle Brahmān is the cause of life. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 18). [§ 730, i.e. XIII, 14-18, is called Maghavāhanopākhyāna.]—§ 731: Yudhiṣṭhira enquired after the purport of the scriptural injunction to husband and wife about the joint performance of all duties. Bhīṣma related the old narrative of the discourse between Aśtāvakra and Diṣṭa, i.e. Aśtāvakra-Dik-sampvāda (δ), (XIII, 19-21).—§ 732: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed on the question who is worthy of receiving gifts, etc., quoting R. Mārkaṇḍeya, etc. (e), (XIII, 22). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discussed the ordinances regulating the actions to be perpetrated towards the deities and the Pitṛs on the occasions of çrāddhas: "One should carefully perform all acts relating to the deities in the forenoon, and all acts relating to the Pitṛs in the afternoon; that gift that is made untimely, etc., is appropriated by Rā."; the brahmins that must not be invited to çrāddhas, and those that should be invited, etc.; Jātakarma, etc. (XIII, 23). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discussed the circumstances under which a person may become guilty of brahmanicide without actually slaying a brahman (XIII, 24).—§ 733: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira about the holy places on earth, Bhīṣma repeated the enumeration of them (a) made by Āṅgiras to Gautama, who put this same question, especially mentioning the result of bathing in Candrabhāgā, etc. (b), in Pushkara, etc. (c), in Hiraṇyabindu, etc. (d), in Indratoya, etc. (e), in Gaṅgādvāra, etc. (f), at Sapta-gaṅga, etc. (g), at Kanyākūpa, etc. (h), in Devika, etc. (i), Mahagaṅgā, etc. (j), Vaimānika, etc. (k), in Çarastamba, etc. (l), Citrakūṣa, etc. (m), Matāṅgavāpi, etc. (n), Gaṅgāhrada, etc. (o), Gaṅgā-Yamunayog Īritham, etc. (p), Marudyaṇa, etc. (q), Upātāka, etc. (r), Açmaprahṣṭha, etc. (s), Viçāla, etc. (t), Punarāvartanandā, etc. (u), Rāmahrada, etc. (v), Narmadā, etc. (w), Cāṇḍalīkagrama (B. Āṇjalī), etc. (x), Ujjānaka, etc. (y), Kālodaka, etc. (z). For the purpose of repairing to all the Īrithas in the world, one should mentally think of those amongst them that are wholly or almost inaccessible. Āṅgiras had obtained this discourse from Kaṣyapa. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 25).—§ 734: Vaiṣampāyana said: Though equal unto Brhaspati in intelligence, Brahmān in forgiveness, Indra in prowess, and Sārya in energy, Bhīṣma (the son of Gaṅgā) had been overthrown in battle by Arjuna. Accompanied by his brothers, etc., Yudhiṣṭhira asked him these questions. He was lying on a bed of arrows in expectation of the time of death. Many M.-r. had come there to see him: Ātri, etc. (a). Yudhiṣṭhira with his brothers duly worshipped those R., who then sat down and conversed about Bhīṣma (who became delighted), and then, taking leave of Bhīṣma and the Pāṇḍavas, made themselves invisible. The Pāṇḍavas then waited upon Bhīṣma, and seeing the quarters of the sky blazing forth with splendour on account of the penances of the Rishis, they became filled with wonder, and talked it over with Bhīṣma. Vaiṣampāyana continued: After that conversation was over, Yudhishthira touched Bhishma's feet with his head, and then resumed his questions relating to morality and righteousness. Yudhishthira asked which countries, retreats, mountains, and rivers are foremost in point of sanctity. Bhishma related the old narrative of a conversation between a brahman who was a ṣiḷoṇha-vṛtti (subsisting upon gleanings) (or ṣilavṛtti) householder and a siddha (crowned with ascetic success) R., who roamed over the earth and once had passed the night in the house of the ṣilavṛtti, who, when they had conversed on subjects connected with the Vedas and Upanishads, asked him this very question, and was instructed by him about the superior sanctity of Gaṅga. Then the siddha ascended the firmament, and the ṣilavṛtti sought the protection of Gaṅga and attained to great success. Yudhishthira, etc., were filled with delight. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 26).—§ 735: Yudhishthira asked how a Kṣhattriya, Vaiśya, or Çādra may acquire the position of a brahman. Bhishma said that the brahmanhood cannot be acquired except by birth, relating an old story of a conversation between Matanga and a she-ass, etc., i.e. Indra-Matanga-samvāda (b), (XIII, 27-29).—§ 736: Yudhishthira mentioned that in former times the position of a brahman was acquired by Viçdāmītra, and asked how king Vitahavya in ancient times succeeded in obtaining brahmanhood. Bhishma told the Vitahavyo-pākhyāna (b), (XIII, 30).—§ 737: Asked by Yudhishthira as to who are worthy of reverent homage, Bhishma repeated the old narrative of the discourse between Nārada and Vasudeva, who asked him the above question. Nārada answered: "I worship them who constantly worship Varuṇa, etc." (a), (XIII, 31).—§ 738: Asked by Yudhishthira about the merits of those persons who grant protection to living creatures, Bhishma told the Çyenakapotākhyāna (b), (XIII, 32).—§ 739: Asked by Yudhishthira which act is the most important of all those that have been laid down for a king, Bhishma said it was the worship of brahmins; they are older than P., D., men, U., and Rā., and incapable of being vanquished by D., P., G., Rā., As., or Pç.; it is owing to the absence of brahmins that the Kṣhattriya tribes, the Çakas, etc. (a), have become degraded into the state of Çādras; the great R. have said that brahmanicide is a heinous sin (XIII, 33); they have Soma for their king; "this was said to me by Nārada"; Aditya, etc. (b), enter the body of the brahman and take what the brahman eats; in the house where brahmins do not eat, P. refuse to eat; examples of brahmins (γ) who have conquered Kṣhattriyas; "in this connection the old story of the conversation between Vasudeva and the Earth," who instructed the former, is told; examples of discomfiture arising from acts hurtful to the brahmins (δ), (XIII, 34). Bhishma's characterisation of brahmins; the Mekalas, etc. (a), and numerous other kṣhattriya tribes have become degraded to the state of Çādras through the wrath of the brahmins; having disregarded the brahmins, As. have been obliged to take refuge in the depths of the ocean; through the favour of the brahmins D. have become denizens of heaven; comparisons with brahmins (ζ): the brahmins are incapable of being subjugated (XIII, 35).—§ 740: Bhishma told the old history of the discourse between Çakra (in the guise of an ascetic—description—on an ugly car) and As. Çambara, who ascribed his success to his never cherishing any ill-feeling towards the brahmins, referring to the encounter between D. and As. in days of old; Çambara's father had obtained instruction from

Çandramas (Soma, the Moon) as to how the brahmins attain to success. Çakra began to worship the brahmins, and therefore succeeded in obtaining the supremacy of the gods (XIII, 36).—§ 741: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the comparative eligibility of brahmins for receiving presents; "one pays off the debt one owes to the gods by performing sacrifices, to P. by procreating children, to the brahmins by making presents unto them, and to the guests by feeding them" (XIII, 37).—§ 742: Asked by Yudhishthira about the disposition of women (who are said to be the root of all evil and exceedingly frail), Bhishma told the old story of the discourse between D.-r. Nārada and the courtesan Aps. Pañcavādā, in ancient times, in the region of Brahmān (Brahmīn, so PCR.), (XIII, 38). Yudhishthira observed that women are in possession of the illusive power of As. Çambara, etc. (a), and the political knowledge of Çakra and Bṛhaspati; "it seems to me that Bṛhaspati and other great thinkers evolved the science of politics from observation of the understanding of women" (XIII, 39).—§ 743: Bhishma approved of what Yudhishthira had said: "There is no creature more sinful than woman; she is the illusion that Dai. Maya created, etc.; I am told that all persons of the human race in course of natural progress attain to the state of gods; this circumstance alarmed the gods; they repaired to Brahmān, who created women by an Ātharvan rite; in a previous creation women were all virtuous; but those that sprang from this creation by Brahmān with the aid of an illusion became sinful; Brahmān bestowed the desire of enjoying all kinds of carnal pleasures upon them." Bhishma repeated the old story of how, in days of yore, Vipula had succeeded in restraining his preceptor's spouse, i.e. Vipulopākhyāna (b), (XIII, 40-43).—§ 744: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma explained upon what person one should bestow one's daughter in marriage; the different forms of marriage (a); various ordinances about marriage, quoting Prajāpati and Manu and the Maruts and the Rakhs; what constitutes or completes the union of marriage; the passing and acceptance of a dowry do not constitute marriage. Bhishma referred to the opinion of Bāhika and his own conduct in liberating Ambā, whom he had abducted for his brother Vicitravatya, having defeated the Magadhas, etc. (b), quoting prince Satyavat (XIII, 44). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma expounded how a girl's kinsmen should act after having received a dowry if the giver goes away without marrying and does not return for some time, comparing the instance of Savitri and quoting Sukratu (the grandson of the Vidols king Janaka); the unrighteous dereliction of eternal usage is regarded as the practice of the Asuras. Asked by Yudhishthira upon what authority the wealth of men is inherited by others when they happen to have daughters, Bhishma explained the different rules of succession, and recited some verses sung in days of yore by Yama about the man who sells his son or bestows his daughter for a dowry (he has to sink into seven terrible hells named Kala); the Ārsha marriage is also a sale; "even a human being with whom one has no relationship of blood should not form the subject of sale" (XIII, 45); a verse of [Dakṣa] Prācetas; how women should be treated; "those houses that are cursed by women meet with destruction and ruin as if scorched by some Ātharvan rite"; Manu, on the eve of his departure for heaven, entrusted women to the care and protection of men; a verse sung by a princess of the house of the Vidols king Janaka on the duties of women (XIII, 46). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma discussed the comparative eligibility of different kinds of sons to the father's inheritance, quoting Manu and Ṛ. and M.-ṛ. Kaṣyapa (B. Ka) Mūrtas; "if a brahman, led by lust, acts in a different way, he shall come to be regarded as a Candāla among brahmins" (XIII, 47). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discussed the duties of persons born in the mixed castes; in the beginning Prajāpati created the four castes for the sake of sacrifice; the son begotten by a brahman upon a Ṣādra wife is called Paraśava (etymology); a Kahattirya's son with a Ṣādra wife is called an Ugra, etc. (γ); only the duties of the four principal castes have been laid down in the scriptures; as regards the others, the scriptures are entirely silent. Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discussed the signs by which the origin of men of impure birth may be known (XIII, 48). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discussed the different kinds of sons: Niruktaja, etc. (δ), (XIII, 49).—§ 745: Asked by Yudhishtira about compassion, etc., Bhishma told the ancient story of a conversation between Nahusha and M.-ṛ. Cyavana, i.e. Cyavanopākhyāna (δ), including Cyavana-Kuṣika-samvāda (XIII, 50-56).—§ 746: Yudhishtira became stupefied with grief at the thought of the millions of men he had slaughtered; he feared that the Paṇḍavas would have to sink in hell, their heads hanging downwards, and desired to practise severe penances. Bhishma expounded the different rewards of different kinds of acts. Yudhishtira desired to attain the end that is reserved to heroes, and no longer expressed any disgust at leading a householder's mode of life, and all the Paṇḍavas with Draupadi approved of his words (XIII, 57). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma spoke of the rewards attached to the planting of trees and the digging of wells and tanks; D., men, G., P., U., and Rā., etc., all resort to a tank full of water as their refuge; the same and Ṛ. all have recourse to trees (XIII, 58). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discussed what gift is distinguished before all other gifts (XIII, 59). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discussed which gift is more meritorious, that bestowed on one who asks for it or that given to an unsoliciting person (XIII, 60). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma explained where one meets with the rewards attached to gifts and sacrifices, adducing the instances of king Çibi and Manu (XIII, 61). Asked by Yudhishtira what is the best of all gifts, Bhishma declared it to be earth (called, therefore, Priyadattā); Mṛtyu, etc. (α), are incapable of touching the person that makes a gift of earth; the verse hearing which [Rāma] Jāmadagnya gave away the whole earth to Kaṣyapa is quoted; a gift of earth is a high expiation for the sin of those who betake themselves to Atharvan rites in order to do injuries to others; Ā., etc. (β), applaud the man who makes a gift of earth; he further told the old narrative of a discourse between Brhaspati and Indra: having adored Viṣṇu in 100 sacrifices, Indra put this same question to Brhaspati, and was instructed by him; "that man who does not keep a promise of a gift of earth, or who recalls it, is tied with the noose of Varuṇa at the command of Death; those men have never to go to Yama who honour and worship brahmins, etc."; that king who makes gifts of earth sports in bliss in heaven, adored by D. and G., and is approached by 100 Aps., etc. Indra gave the whole earth to Brhaspati; if these verses are recited at a çrāddha neither Rā. nor As. can succeed in appropriating any share of the offerings made (XIII, 62). Asked by Yudhishtira as to what gifts kings should make, what gifts immediately gratify the brahmins, what fruits attach to them, what gifts are productive of rewards both here and hereafter, Bhishma related the answer he had received from Nārada when he put the same question to him: a gift of food made to even a Candāla or a dog is never lost; in a former Kalpa (purā kalpe) Prajāpati said that food is amṛta, etc.; Agni and Soma in the body create and maintain the vital seed; thus the sun and wind (Pavanaḥ) and the vital seed spring and act from food; description of the regions of heaven reserved to those that make gifts of food (XIII, 63). Yudhishtira enquired after the conjunctions of the planets and stars in relation to gifts. Bhishma repeated the ancient narrative of the discourse between Devaki and Ṛ. Nārada at Dvārakā, where Nārada answered this very question. Devaki in her turn told it to her daughters-in-law (XIII, 64). Various merits of various kinds of gifts, Bhishma referring to Atri, etc. (γ); ghee is said to gratify Brhaspati, etc. (δ), (XIII, 65). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma commented on the gift of sandals and shoes, and of sesame, and land, and kine, and food; sesame seeds were created by Brahmā as the best food of the Pitṛs, etc.; Āpastamba, etc. (ε), have all ascended to heaven by means of making gifts of sesame seeds. Once the gods, desirous of performing a sacrifice on the earth, repaired to Brahmā on the Himavat and obtained from him a clod of earth (which the *muni*s should always adore); there came Agastya, etc. (ζ); the gods attached one-sixth of the merit arising from their sacrifice to the gift of earth; in days of yore king Rantideva performed a grand sacrifice, in which an immense number of kine were slaughtered; from the juice of their skins the river Carmanvatī was formed; king Rantideva, in days of yore, ascended to heaven on account of his having given gifts of food; the cow should never be given away for slaughter; what kine should not be given to brahmins; he referred to Parāśara; the seasons when gifts of food produce particular merits (XIII, 66). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma dealt with the merits that attach to gifts of drink, quoting Savitṛi and Lomaśa and Manu, and mentioning Çibi; Soma, etc. (η), has sprung from water; D. have amṛta for their food, N. have Sudhā, P. have Snadha (XIII, 67). Yudhishtira asked about the merits that attach to gifts of sesame and lamps for lighting darkness, as also of food and robes; Bhishma told the narrative of the conversation between a brahman and Yama, in ancient times, in the large town of Parnaçalā (inhabited by brahmins) between Yamunā and Gaṅgā, at the foot of the Yamunā hills; one day Yama commanded a messenger of his (description) to bring the person named Çarmin of Agastya's race from this town (Agastyaṃ gotṛatāḥ), not confounding him with another of the same gotra; he should be worshipped with respect. The messenger did the very reverse; Yama ordered this man to be taken back and Çarmin to be brought; the former was, however, first instructed by Yama regarding gifts. Then the messenger conveyed him back and fetched Çarmin; Yama, having given him the same instructions, dismissed him to be taken back to his abode. The giver of a lamp is regarded as benefiting the Pitṛs and Yama; it enhances the power of vision of D., P., and one's self; citing Manu about a gift of gems (XIII, 68). Bhishma, at Yudhishtira's solicitation, reverted to the topic of the merits of gifts, with especial reference to the gift of earth; a cow should never be given to a person that is not righteous (XIII, 69). The tale of the calamity that befell king Nṛga, who had unwittingly taken a cow belonging to a brahman and given it away to another brahman. Formerly, when Dvāravastī was founded (read with B. niviṣṭāntyaṁ), a huge lizard was seen (or met with?) in a well; Kṛṣṇa took it out and learnt that it was king Nṛga, who in days of old had performed many sacrifices and repeatedly made gifts of hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of kine to the brahmins; a brahman's cow had accidentally come among Nṛga's and been given to another brahman, whose weak child it nourished; neither of them would take the most exorbitant gifts in exchange; after death, when he came to the region of the Pitṛs, Yama let him choose as his punishment for this little sin to become a lizard for 1,000 years, till he was rescued by Vāsudeva. Then Nṛga mounted a celestial car and proceeded to heaven; a verse of Kṛṣṇa's is quoted (XIII, 70). Yudhiṣṭhira asked Bhīṣma to further detail the merits attainable by gifts of kine. Bhīṣma told the old story of R. Uddalaki and his son Naciketa, whom he had cursed to go and see Yama, because Naciketa had not found the articles (enumeration) he was sent for, as they had been washed away by the current. Naciketa fell down, deprived of life; Uddalaki indulged in lamentations; when the night came, Naciketa, drenched with his father's tears, revived, and in the midst of the Rāhis told that he had been honoured in Yama's delightful palace, which extended over 1,000 yojanas; "Yama said that I was not dead, but had only come to see Yama in compliance with the words of my father"; Yama, at his request, had caused him to be mounted on a vehicle and showed him all those delightful regions that are reserved for the righteous (description), who make gifts in the world of men, especially gifts of kine, etc. (considerations of propriety or otherwise); in the absence of kine, a person by making gifts of a substitute of kine (e.g. a cow made of ghee) wins the merit of making gifts of kine; gifts of kine on kāmyādharma, etc.; "I then took leave of Yama and have now come back" (XIII, 71). Yudhiṣṭhira asked about the regions of kine, which are the residence of givers of kine. Bhīṣma related the old tale of the conversation between Brahmān and Indra, who, seeing that the residents of the regions of kine surpassed the denizens of heaven, asked Brahmān about them (XIII, 72). The comments of Brahmān to Indra on the subject of kine, reference being made to Rāhis, etc. (XIII, 73). Asked by Indra, Brahmān spoke about the end of him who consciously steals a cow or sells one from motives of cupidity. Bhīṣma explained how Brahmān's discourse had been handed down from Indra to Bhīṣma: Brahmān > Indra > Dāśaratha > Rāma [Dāśarathi] > Lakṣmaṇa > the Rāhis (while dwelling in the woods) > from generation to generation > Bhīṣma's preceptor > Bhīṣma. Blessing upon the reader (XIII, 74). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma explained the rewards that attach to the observance of different kinds of vows: many millions of R. are residing in Brahmaloka (XIII, 75). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma commented upon the ordinances that regulate gifts of kine, quoting the instruction given by Brhaspati to king Mandhātṛ; "kine have that in them that partakes of the nature of both Sarya and Soma"; application of the words bhavitavya, etc. (8); all the three [cow-givers], etc., and he who is well conversant with the Mahābhārata attain to the regions of Vishnu and Soma; names of kings who have attained to regions of great felicity as the reward of such gifts of kine as they made according to the instructions of Brhaspati: Ugras, etc. (9).—Vaiṣampāyana said: King Yudhiṣṭhira did all that Bhīṣma wished; he

from that time began always to make gifts of kine and to support himself on grains of barley and on cow-dung as his food and drink, and he began to sleep from that day on the bare earth, and gave up the practice of harnessing kine to his vehicles, and used cars drawn by horses (XIII, 76). Vaiṣampāyana continued: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma once more went into detail on the merits attaching to the gift of kine: a Kapila cow is the best of all kine; Yudhiṣṭhira asked why; Bhīṣma said he had heard old men tell the following story: In days of yore Brahmān commanded Dakṣa to create living creatures; Dakṣa, in the first instance, created food; he drank amṛta, a fragrant eructation came out, and gave birth to the cow Surabhi, whose daughters came to be regarded as the mothers of the world; they were all Kapilas; some froth from the calves fell upon the head of Mahādeva, who, filled with wrath, turned his third eye towards them, which produced various complexions in them; some escaped to the region of Soma and retained their colour. Dakṣa informed Śiva that this froth was amṛta and not impure; Candramas (the Moon), after drinking the amṛta, pours it out again; but it is not, on that account, regarded as impure. Dakṣa then presented Mahādeva with a bull and certain kine; Mahādeva was gratified and made that bull his vehicle, and after the form of that bull adopted the device on his standard; it was on that occasion also that the gods, uniting together, made Mahādeva the lord of animals. Cows yield Soma in the form of milk. Blessing upon the reader.—Vaiṣampāyana continued: Yudhiṣṭhira and his brother began to make gifts of both bulls and cows of different colours to brahmins, Yudhiṣṭhira performing many sacrifices (XIII, 78). Bhīṣma said: In days of yore, king Saudāsa of Iksvaku's race asked his purohita R. Vasishṭha what is most sacred and most productive of merit; Vasishṭha enlarged upon the mystery relating to kine; svadha and vashat are for ever established in kine; what is meant by Gomati (XIII, 79). Continuation of Vasishṭha's discourse on the pre-eminent sanctity of kine; the diverse merits attaching to gifts of different kinds of kine: Brahmaloka, etc. (α), (XIII, 79). Vasishṭha commented on the purificatory mantras having reference to kine; "those who make gifts of 1,000 kine, departing from this world, proceed to the region of G. and Aps., where there are many palatial mansions made of gold, and Vasor dhara (i.e. Mandakini, Nil.); . . . by giving away a Kapila cow, etc., one succeeds in entering the palace of Yama that is so difficult to enter."—Bhīṣma said: Saudāsa, honouring these words of R. Vasishṭha, made gifts of a very large number of kine unto the brahmins, and attained to many worlds of felicity in the next life (XIII, 80). Yudhiṣṭhira asked what is the most sacred of all sacred things in the world, and which is the highest of all sanctifying objects. Bhīṣma said: Kine are the most excellent of all objects, etc.; Mandhātṛ, etc. (λ), always used to give away kine in thousands, and have attained to such regions as are unattainable even by the gods; he quoted a discourse delivered of old. Čuka (having finished his morning observances) asked R. Vyāsa what is the foremost of all sacrifices, and was instructed by him, who praised kine and described the region of kine which the blessed only attain; Aps. always entertain them there; those regions that have for their lords Pashan and the Maruts are attained to by givers of kine; they attain to wealth like that of Varuṇa himself; one should daily recite these mantras (μ) declared by Prajāpati himself. [In this section Yudhishtira has repeatedly been addressed instead of Çuka.] The man who, for a month, subsists upon the gruel of barley picked up every day from cow-dung, becomes free of sins as grave as the slaughter of a brahman: after their defeat at the hands of Dai., the gods practised this penance, owing to which they regained their position; the efficaciousness of the Gomati mantras.—Bhishma said: From that time Çuka began to worship kine every day (XIII, 81). Yudhishtira asked how it is that the dung of the cow is possessed of Çri. Bhishma told the old story of the conversation between the kine and Çri, who once in a beautiful form entered a herd of cows, saying: "The Daityas, forsaken by me, have been lost for ever; the gods Indra, etc. (ν), having obtained me, are sporting in joy and will do so for ever; R. and D. only when they are favoured by me become crowned with success"; she wished to reside in the kine; they refused her, saying she was fickle and restless. Çri said: "D., Dā., G., Pç., U., Rā., and men succeed in obtaining me only after the severest austerities"; they agreed that she should live in their urine and dung (XIII, 82). Bhishma continued his discourse on kine, repeating the old tale of the discourse between Brahmán and Indra, after Dai. had been defeated and all creatures grew in prosperity; then once R., G., K., U., Rā., D., As., the birds, and the Prajāpatis all adored Brahmán; Nārada, etc. (ξ), sang, etc. (ο); Indra asked him about the region of kine; Brahmán said that Indra had always disregarded kine, and commented to him on the superiority of kine. He explained to him why kine have descended to earth: In days of yore, when in the Deva-yuga the Dānavas became lords of the three worlds, Aditi underwent the severest austerities (standing upon one leg for many years) and begot Viṣṇu; seeing Aditi perform penances, Surabhi, the daughter of Dakṣa, also underwent austerities on Kailāsa (resorted to by D. and G.), in yoga, standing upon one leg for 11,000 years; "D., R., and M.-U. became scorched and repaired thither with me (Brahmán); as she did not herself ask a favour, I granted her the boon of immortality, and that she should dwell in Goloka, while her offspring, engaged in doing good acts, would reside in the world of men (description of Goloka)."

Bhishma continued: From that time Çakra began to worship kine every day. Blessing upon the reader, etc. (XIII, 83).—§ 747: Yudhishtira asked why gold, in the Çrutis, is declared to be even superior to kine as a dakṣiṇā, and what gold is, etc. Bhishma related the circumstances connected with the origin of gold: "When my father Çāntanu was dead, I went to Gaṅgādvāra to perform his çrāddha; Gaṅgā came and rendered me great help (description); a handsome arm, adorned with aṅgādas, etc., rose up piercing the ground; the P. did not come in their visible forms to take the cake; I, therefore, disregarding the hand, offered the whole cake on blades of kuça-grass, according to rule; then the arm of my father vanished. In that night the Pitṛs appeared to me in a dream, pleased by my adherence to the rules, whereby I had honoured the authority of the scriptures, etc. (α); I had made gifts of earth and kine; now I should make gifts of gold. Listen now to this old story, that extends the period of life for him who listens to it; it was first recited to Rāma Jāmadagnya, who in former days exterminated the Kṣatriyas twenty-one times; by performing a horse-sacrifice he became free from sin, but he still failed to attain to perfect lightness of heart; he repaired to R. and D., then to Vasiṣṭha, etc. (β); they told him that in days of yore Agni burnt all the world; from his seed sprang gold; he should make gifts of gold; Vasiṣṭha in especial commented on gold: it is the essence of Agni and Soma, etc. (γ); such is the teaching of the Smṛtis; in churning the entire universe a mass of energy (i.e. gold) was found; hence gold is superior; D., G., U., Rā., men, and Pç. keep it with care; Agni is all the deities in one, and Agni is the essence of gold. I formerly heard this in the Purāṇa; it represents the speech of Prajāpati himself." Then he related Suvarṇotputti (δ), (XIII, 84-85).—§ 748: Asked by Yudhishtira (who refers to § 747δ), Bhishma related Tārakavadhohpākhyāna (δ), (XIII, 86).—§ 749: Asked by Yudhishtira (who perhaps refers to § 641—XII, 60 ff.), Bhishma explained the ordinances respecting the çrāddha. D., As., men, G., Pç., K., every one should always worship P. P. are worshipped before the gods. The merits and demerits of the different lunar days for performing the çrāddha: 1st-13th days of the bright fortnight are auspicious; all the young men in the family of him who performs it on the 14th day meet with death, and he himself becomes entangled in war; the day of the new moon and 10th-13th days of the dark fortnight are auspicious; the dark fortnight is better than the bright one, the afternoon better than the forenoon (XIII, 87). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma explained what, if presented to P., becomes inexhaustible and eternal, and the periods for which different offerings presented at çrāddhas gratify the P., quoting some verses [originally] sung by P. and communicated to him by Sanatkumāra, recommending pāyasa with ghee on the 13th day [of the dark fortnight, PCR.] under Maghāḥ during the Sun's southward course, and, under the same constellation, meat of goat, etc., and çrāddhas at Gaya (δ), (XIII, 88); the different merits acquired by persons by performing optional (kāmyāni) çrāddhas under various nakṣatras, and which were [first] explained by Yama to Çaṇabindu: by performing such a çrāddha under the Īrttikāḥ, "a man acquires the merit of a sacrifice after establishing the sacred fire, and ascends to heaven with his children" (PCR.), etc. (α). Having listened to these ordinances about the çrāddha, Çaṇabindu acted accordingly, and easily subjugated and ruled the earth (XIII, 89). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma explained to what kinds of brahmans the offerings made at çrāddhas should be given away, quoting the Vaikhāṇasa Rahis (XIII, 90). Asked by Yudhishtira by whom the çrāddha was first conceived, etc., in the time when the world was only peopled by the descendants of Bhr̥gu and Angiras (Bhr̥gu-Angirasako kāl), etc., Bhishma said: Brahmán > Atri > Dattatraya > Nimi > Çrīmat. After 1,000 years Çrīmat died, having undergone the severest austerities; Nimi, filled with grief, collected various agreeable objects on the 14th day of the moon, and the next morning he conceived the idea of a çrāddha; on the day of the new moon he invited a number of respected brahmans, gave food to seven such brahmans, and made an offering of cakes of rice to his dead son, uttering his name and family (nāma-gotraṃ). He then became filled with regret, having done an act that was not laid down in the scriptures [that a father had done with reference to his son what sons ought to do with reference to their fathers, PCR.]; he thought of Atri, who came and comforted him, saying that this sacrifice in honour of the Pitṛs had been laid down and its rites regulated by Brahmán himself in days of yore: one should pour out libations to Agni, etc. (β); the gods named Pitṛs [and] Viṣṇavas [so

B. and C.; cf. BR., v. Uśhmapa] were created by Svayambhū (i.e. Brahman) and consist of seven classes (saptakāṣṭha pīṭvaṃśas); when they are honoured by a grādha, they become freed from sin; the Viśvadevas [sixty-four (7) are enumerated], having Agni for their mouth, they are eternal (? Kālasya gati-gocarāḥ; C. °ayāga°; "eternal and conversant with all that occurs in time," PCR.). Articles that should not be offered at grādhas. From the place of a grādha a Cūṇḍala and a Ṣaṇḍa should be excluded, as also one who wears yellow clothes (Kūśhāyavāsāḥ), a leper, an outcast (patitaḥ), etc. Having said this to R. Nimi, Atri went back to the celestial palace of Pitāmaha (Brahman) (XIII, 91). After Nimi had acted in this way, M.-r. performed a grādha. The Pitṛs and gods became afflicted with indigestion in consequence of the offerings (nirāpn) made by persons of the four castes. They repaired to Soma, and thence to Svayambhū (on the summit of Meru), and thence to Agni. Agni told them to eat those offerings together with him. It is for this reason that in making offerings at grādhas a share is first offered to Agni; then also the Brahma-Rakshasas cannot do any injury to the grādha; but the Rakshasas fly away from it (v. 4383-4). The cake should first be offered to the [deceased] father, then to the grandfather, then to the great-grandfather; at each cake the Sāvitrī should be uttered (Somāyeti ca vaktavyam tathā pīṭmateti ca); a woman of another gotra (anyavaṃśajā), etc., should not assist at a grādha; while crossing a river, one should offer oblations of water to one's P., and also on the day of the new moon (māsardhḥ kṛṣṇapakṣasya); this gives prosperity, etc.; Brahman, etc. (i), are great masters of yoga and [numbered among] P. (XIII, 92).—§ 750: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhishma said that brahmins who are observant of vows not mentioned in the Vedas may eat at grādhas without incurring sin; but not so those who are observant of vows mentioned in the Vedas. Penance is not really identifiable with fast; one should not torment one's own body; renunciation is the best of penances; the brahmin should eat Vighasa or Amṛta (i.e. food that remains after the guests, etc., have eaten); one should only eat morning and evening at the prescribed hours, etc.; such men obtain felicity in the abode of Brahman in the company of Aps. and G. If the giver happens to be unrighteous, the receiver sinks into hell. In this connection an old tale of a conversation between Vṛshādarbhi and the seven Rakṣis is told: Bisastainyopākhyāna (b) (XIII, 93).—§ 751: Bhishma said: In this connection the old story of the oaths on the occasion of a Ārtthayatra [i.e. Ṣaṇḍavidhi] is told (b) (XIII, 94).—§ 752: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira by whom the custom of giving umbrellas and sandals at grādhas was introduced, Bhishma related the story of the discourse between Jamadagni and Sūrya [i.e. Chattropānahotpatti] (b). "Do thou, therefore, give away umbrellas and shoes to brahmins. He who gives away a white umbrella with 100 ribs to a brahmin attains to eternal felicity after death in Ṣakra-loka, being respected by brahmins, Aps., and D." (XIII, 95-96).—§ 753: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira about the duties of a householder, Bhishma recited the old story of Vasudeva (Kṛṣṇa) and the goddess Prithivī (Earth), who instructed Vasudeva on this very topic: R., D., P., and men should be worshipped . . . ; he should perform an Agni-Shoma, Vaiṣṇaveya, and Dhānavantarya offering, and separately an offering to Prajāpati and bali to Yama, etc. (a); he should daily perform a grādha (description); he should take his food last of all (śiṣṭāṅgi); he should with madhuparka honour a king, ṛtvij, guru, father-in-law, and enātaka; in the evening and morning he should place food on the ground for dogs, ṣaṇḍas, and birds: this is called the Vaiṣṇaveya offering. Vasudeva acted accordingly (XIII, 97).—§ 754: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhishma, in order to explain the gift of lamps, flowers, and incense, told the old story of the discourse between the Prajāpati Manu Svayambhū and the learned and noble brahmin Surarna (so called from his golden complexion) on the golden mountain Meru. Asked by Surarna about the above-named topic, Manu related the old history of the discourse between Ṣakra Bhārgava and the Asura king Bali Vairocana, who ruled the three worlds. Asked by Bali about this very topic, Ṣakra discoursed on the plants (having Soma for their lord), of which some are amṛta (and agreeable to the gods, etc.) and some poison; some are acceptable to As., some to the gods, R., U., Y., men, P.; garlands of water flowers should be offered to G., N., and Y.; plants with red flowers and keen scent and having thorns have been laid down in the Atharvans as fit for incantation in order to injure foes, etc.; D. become gratified with the scent of flowers, Y. and R. with their sight, N. with their touch, men with all three. Among incenses, all exudations (except that of the Boswellia serrata) are agreeable to the gods; that of Aquilaria Agallocha to Y., R., and N.; that of Boswellia serrata, etc., to D., etc. [For avoiding] Andhatamas (B. °an ta°; a certain hell, Nil.), darkness, and the sun's southward course, one should give lights during the sun's northward course (Nil. and the note of PCR., p. 477); D. are resplendent, R. dark; hence one should always give lights, etc.; thereby a man attains to the same world as the celestial lights (dyotishāṇa lōkyaṃ). The merits of bali-offerings made to D., Y., U., men, Bhūtas, and R. Y., R., Pn., D., P., etc., are supported by the food offered by the householder; the bali offered to Y. and R. should be rich in blood and meat, wines and spirits, etc.; bali with lotuses and utpalas are agreeable to N.; sesame seeds with sugar to the Bhūtas. He who eats without first serving brahmins and gods and guests and children, should be known as a R. Thus said Kāṇva Bhārgava to Bali; then Manu > Surarna > Nārada > Bhishma (XIII, 98).—§ 755: Yudhiṣṭhira (referring to § 754) once more questioned Bhishma on this subject; Bhishma told the old story of the discourse between Nahusha and Agastya and Bṛghu [i.e. Nahushopākhyāna] (b) (XIII, 99-100).—§ 756: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira where those men go who steal articles belonging to brahmins, Bhishma related the old conversation between a Cūṇḍala and a Kṣhatṛiya (Kṣhatṛabandhoḥ), who wondered that the old Cūṇḍala, whose body was besmeared with the dust raised by dogs and asses, without minding that dust, was anxious to wash off the small drops of milk that had fallen upon his body; the Cūṇḍala related that formerly some kine belonging to a brahmin were stolen, and some milk from them fell upon some Soma plants that grew by the roadside; the king who performed the sacrifice with this Soma, the brahmins who drank its juice, those who had assisted at the sacrifice, and those who drank milk, etc., in the palace of this king, had to fall into hell, as also the sons and grandsons of those who had stolen them, and the queen, although she treated the animals with great care. The Cūṇḍala himself, who had lived in the observance of brahmacarya in that place, and whose alma had been sprinkled with the milk of the kine, had in this life become a Cūṇḍala. It is for this reason that the Soma plants become unsaleable, and the persons who sell and who purchase them both sink into the Raurava-hell, when they repair to the region of Yama, etc. "Behold also this miserable dog!" In a former life the Candala was born in a noble family, but out of pride he ate the meat attached to the vertebral column of animals, and thence he had attained to his present state; in consequence of some meritorious act in a former life, he had retained the memory of his previous existences. Asked by the Candala, the kshatriya told him (in order to obtain emancipation (moksha) from his state of a Candala) to give up his life for the sake of a brahman. This the Candala did in a battle for protecting a brahman's wealth, and attained to a desirable end (XIII, 101).—§ 757: Asked by Yudhishtira whether there is a difference of position among righteous men after death, Bhisma related the old narrative of the conversation between the muni Gautama and Indra [i.e. Hastikūṭa] (δ) (XIII, 102).—(†) § 758: Asked by Yudhishtira what constitutes the highest penance, Bhisma said that there is no penance superior to abstention from food, and told the old story of the conversation between king Bhagiratha and Brahman. Bhagiratha had transcended the world of the gods, that of kine, and that of the Rakhs; beholding this, Brahman asked him how he had attained to that region, where neither gods, nor G., nor men succeed in coming without having practised the severest austerities; Bhagiratha enumerated his sacrifices, his penances on the Jahnvi (Gaṅgā), etc. (α); those on the banks of Saraya, etc. (β), he gave away millions of kine to the brahmins. "It is not through the merits of those acts that I have attained to this region, but through the vow of fast, which had been known to Indra, who had kept it secret, but which Bhārgava Uṣanas had learnt through penance († v. 5945); all brahmins and Ṛ. gratified me, saying that I should repair to Brahmaloka." Bhagiratha was honoured by Brahman (XIII, 103).—§ 759: Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhisma discussed the reason why, a man's period of life being said to extend over 100 years, one becomes short-lived or long lived; one should awake at the Brāhma muhūrta [i.e. at the hour when the sun is just below the horizon, PCR.]; Ṛ. by adoring the two twilights became long-lived; one should avoid atheism (nāstikyaṃ), calumniating the Vedas, censuring the gods, etc.; one should also wash one's feet before sitting down to recite the Vedas or to eat any food; one should perform the homas for propitiating the gods (śāntihomān) and recite the Sāvitra mantras (Sāvitrāṇi or dharayet; i.e. mantraviśeṣān, Nil.); persons conversant with ancient history cite a gāthā sung by Yama in days of old (about running—prādravati, B.—or studying with uncleaned mouth); "he who studies at forbidden times, loses his Veda and shortens his life" (v. 5028-8); nor should one eat at the grāddha of an enemy; the spots of the hand named Brāhma tirtha, etc. (α); having drunk water thrice, etc., one should worship the P. and gods according to the ordinances of the Vedas (v. 5065); a brahman should perform [the ācamana] (samupaspṛśet) in all the purificatory acts with the Brāhma tirtha (v. 5066); one should never perform any act in honour of P. in the night-time (v. 5075); one should wash his head before performing any act in honour of P. or gods (v. 5081); one should never perform [a grāddha] under the constellation of one's nativity, nor under the two Prokṣhapadas, nor under Āgneya (i.e. Kṛttikā, Nil.), nor under fierce [nakṣatras, such as Aśleṣa, etc., PCR.], nor under those that are hostile (pratyaṇi), or those mentioned [i.e. forbidden] in the Jyotiṣa (v. 5082-3); a woman of the same pravara (samāraṇa), etc., should be avoided [in wedding] (v. 5086); one should accomplish all acts ordained in the Veda or by the Brāhmanas (v. 5092); one should study the Dharmaveda and the Veda (v. 5100); "you should know the science of reasoning (Yuktiśāstraṃ), the science of words (Śabdāśāstraṃ), the Gāndharvaśāstra, and the [64] Kālas, [and] one should always hear the Purāṇa and śikhāṣas and the narratives that exist (akhyānāni yāni ca), and the biographies (caritaṃ) of high-minded persons" (v. 5102-3); good conduct (dharma) is superior to all lore (śāstra); this fame-producing, etc., [discourse] has been uttered by Brahman out of compassion on all creatures (v. 5112) (XIII, 104). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhisma expounded how the eldest brother should behave towards his younger brothers and the younger ones towards the eldest; "the upādhyaya is superior to 10 ādhyas; the father to 10 upādhyayas; the mother to 10 fathers or [even] to the whole earth; there is no guru equal to the mother" (v. 5126-7) (XIII, 105). Asked by Yudhishtira if only brahmins and kshatriyas should observe fasts (the very Mlecchas observe them), Bhisma related what Ṛ. Āgiras had said to him in answer [essentially in the negative] to this same question, indicating the merits of fast on different days and different months (β), by which fasts the merit of different sacrifices (γ) are acquired, or the abode of the Aps., or Brahmaloka attained; there is no penance superior to fast: by fasts the gods became denizens of heaven, and Ṛ. attained to the highest success (siddhim); witness Viśvāmitra, and Cyavana, etc. (δ), who attained to heaven through fasts. In former days Āgiras declared so to M.-Ṛ.†* (XIII, 106). Yudhishtira, saying that sacrifices are incapable of being performed by people that are poor, as they require a large store of diverse kinds of articles, wherefore the merit attaching to them can only be acquired by kings and princes, asked Bhisma about acts fraught with merit equal to that of sacrifices and capable of being performed by persons destitute of means. Bhisma related the ordinances about fasts that were promulgated by Āgiras; the regions attainable by them (ε) and the sacrifices they are equal to (ζ) (XIII, 107). Asked by Yudhishtira about that which is the foremost of all tirthas, Bhisma mentioned and described Mānasa tirtha [in the figurative sense of the soul]; but also the tirthas of the earth are possessed of merit; by reciting the name of a tirtha, by bathing there, and by gladdening P. there, one casts off one's sins and goes to heaven (v. 5365) (XIII, 108). Asked by Yudhishtira as to what is the highest, etc., kind of fast, Bhisma said: [A = "that man who fasts on the 12th day of the moon in the month so called"; B = "and, for the whole day and night, worships Kṛṣṇa as Keçava, etc."; C = "obtains the merits of the horse sacrifice, etc."; D = "and freedom from sin, etc."]

At the conclusion of one's vow, one should feed a number of brahmins or make gifts of ghee to them. Vishṇu has said that there is no fast superior to that (XIII, 109). Vaiṣampāyana said: Approaching Bṛishma, who was lying on his bed of arrows, Yudhishtira asked how one does acquire beauty, etc. Bṛishma said that a Candrarata should be commenced in Mārgaśrēṣa, when the moon comes in conjunction with Māla:

[The figures in brackets indicate the number in the ecliptic; Abhijit [22] is wanting.] Then gifts of ghee to learned brahmins; one becomes as accomplished (paripūrṇaṅga) as the full moon (XIII, 110).—§ 760: Yudhishtira asked, what regulates rebirth, etc. Bṛishma directed him to ask Brhaspati, as none else was capable of explaining the matter. Vaiṣampāyana said: While they were thus speaking Brhaspati came from heaven; Yudhishtira with Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc., honoured him; then Yudhishtira asked him, what is truly the friend of mortal creatures, and what follows man to the next world. Brhaspati said: Righteousness. Yudhishtira asked, how righteousness can accompany the dead body. Brhaspati said that the soul (jīva) obtains a new body according to its merit, Yama, etc. (α), being the witnesses, etc. Deities dwelling in the body, viz. earth, etc. (β). After birth jīva receives woe and death from the messengers of Yama; if imbued with unrighteousness, jīva has to go to the dominions of Yama, and after suffering great misery there, he has to undergo rebirth as an animal, or as some other kind of being, as declared in the Vedas and the scriptures (śāstre) with the histories (śāhās). In the regions of Yama there are places worthy of being the abodes even of the deities, and which are equal to Brahmaloka, but also such as are worse than [those of animals]. Different forms in which jīva has to take birth in consequence of different acts (e.g. as a Brahma-Rakṣasa; as Mlecchā). [The periods that elapse before one recovers human existence are here generally very short, some few months or years.] “I heard all this in days of old from Brahma himself in the midst of the śvarāṇi” (XIII, 111). Asked by Yudhishtira, Brhaspati explained by what acts people, having committed sin, attain to an auspicious end in this world and in heaven, especially recommending gifts of food (praised by D., R., P., and men), citing Rautideva (δ) (XIII, 112). Asked by Yudhishtira, Brhaspati discoursed on the six doors of righteousness (abstention from injury, the observance of the Vedic ritual, meditation, restraining the senses, penances, and obedience to preceptors), saying that the man who practises the religion of universal compassion achieves the highest good, etc. Vaiṣampāyana said: Then Brhaspati ascended to heaven. [XIII, 111-113 are called Samādra-akṛā] (XIII, 113).—§ 761: Vaiṣampāyana said: After this Yudhishtira, addressing Bṛishma (lying on his bed of arrows), said: R., D., and brahmins, led by the authority of the Vedas, praise the religion of compassion; but how does a man who has injured others in word, thought, and deed, succeed in freeing himself from misery? Bṛishma recommended abstention from meat; meat, moreover, enslaves the mind by taste (XIII, 114). Yudhishtira (referring to § 749) wondered how, when abstention from injury is the highest religion, persons should make offerings of meat in grādhas in honour of P. Bṛishma referred to the innumerable discourses on this topic that had taken place between R., and strongly recommended abstention from honey and meat, referring to the seven R. (Saptarāṣya), etc. (α), and quoting Manu, etc. (β); he who eats flesh of animals slain by others incurs the sin that attaches to the slaughter; he who purchases flesh slays living creatures through his wealth (the eater's demerit is, however, not so great as the slayer's); by eating flesh left from sacrifices [to D. and P.; v. especially Agastya] and of animals that have been slain for feeding brahmins, one incurs a small fault. In old time persons who wanted to attain to regions of merit hereafter, performed sacrifices with seeds. Especially in the month of Kārttika or in its bright fortnight one should abstain from [honey and] meat, which many ancient kings have done: Nabhaga, etc. (γ); those who abstain from flesh for months or fortnights continuously, have Brahmaloka reserved to them. (It is by truthfulness that Hariścandra roves through heaven like a second Candrama.) Also the kings Cyavacitra, etc. (δ), did not eat flesh during the month of Kārttika, and, therefore, attained to Brahmaloka, adored by G. and surrounded by 1,000 beautiful damsels. The eaters of meat go to Hell; he who practises the religion of abstention from meat or teaches it to others will never have to go to Hell, even if he be exceedingly wicked in other respects* (XIII, 115). Asked by Yudhishtira what can be eaten, etc., Bṛishma discoursed on what is flesh, and continued the preceding discourse, again mentioning Agastya; snakes, etc. (ε), never hurt him who is devoted to compassion; those who are covetous of meat are cooked in the hell called Kumbhipāka; etymology of the word māṃsa (flesh) (XIII, 116).—§ 762: Asked by Yudhishtira what end those attain to who give up their lives in battle, though to give up life is difficult for men, whether they are in prosperity or adversity, Bṛishma explained the old narrative of the conversation, in former times, between Vyāsa and a worm: Kiṭopākhyāna (δ) (XIII, 117-119).—§ 763: Asked by Yudhishtira about the relative superiority of knowledge, penances, and gifts, Bṛishma told the old narrative of the conversation between Maitreya and Vyāsa: Maitreya-bhikṣā (δ) (XIII, 120-122).—

and then to perform one's ablutions; to offer cooked food with honey, in an uḍumbāra vessel, as bali to the moon on the evening of the day of full-moon, which offer is accepted by Śā., etc. (γ), and whereby Soma and the Ocean increase* (spoken by Vishṇu). Bhishma said that these mysteries (respected by D. and promulgated by Vyāsa) are even superior to the whole earth († v. 6198), and should not be imparted to any unbeliever, etc. (XIII, 134).—§ 767: Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma enumerated those persons from which a brahman, a kṣattriya, a vaiśya, and a śūdra may take his food, etc. (XIII, 135). Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhishma expounded the expiations which purify a brahman of the sin he incurs by accepting forbidden food (especially offered to D. and P.); without having performed his ablutions, a brahman should not say his evening prayers, etc.; for this reason the grādha has been ordained to be performed in the afternoon (XIII, 136). Asked by Yudhishthira which is better, charity (dāna) or devotion (tapas), Bhishma enumerated the pious princes who have attained to heaven (lokaḥ) (a). "These and many other men (householders) have attained to heaven by charity and penances, and return again and again. As night approaches, I shall explain to thee in the morning whatever doubts may arise in thy mind" (XIII, 137). Asked by Yudhishthira (who refers to XIII, 137), Bhishma discoursed on the five kinds of gifts: from desire of merit, from desire of profit, from fear, from free choice, and from pity; Brahmān has said that one should always make gifts according to one's power (XIII, 138).—§ 768: Yudhishthira, complaining of the distress of the time, asked Bhishma to discourse on religion and profit in the presence of Kṛṣṇa and all the king: Vaiṣampāyana said that Bhishma recited the discourses on the puissance of Vishṇu in days of yore (and the doubt of Rudra and his spouse). Once Kṛṣṇa observed a vow for twelve years in order to obtain a son; Nārada, etc. (a), came there with Si., etc. (description of their seats); fire issued from the mouth of Kṛṣṇa and consumed the summit of the mountain with all its living creatures, then it came back and touched his feet; he cast a benignant look upon the mountain, which once more became adorned and peopled as before. Asked by R., Kṛṣṇa explained that, in consequence of his penances, his soul became transformed into fire and repaired to Brahmān (who told it that half of the energy of Çiva would take birth as Kṛṣṇa's son), and then went back; "I now ask you to tell me something that is highly wonderful, which you have heard of or seen on earth or in heaven." R. glorified Kṛṣṇa, and asked by them, Nārada described the wonderful incident on Himavat, "which was witnessed by R. on their tirthayatra" (XIII, 139). Bhishma said: Then R. Nārada, the friend of Kṛṣṇa, told the following story of the discourse between Çiva and Uma: Umā-Maheçvara-samvāda (b) (XIII, 140-148). Bhishma said: Kṛṣṇa paid honour to R., who praised Kṛṣṇa, approving of what Çiva had said of him, and saying that they had told him [about the discourse of Çiva with Uma], only to please him, since he had asked them; but "there is nothing in the three worlds that is unknown to thee." R. took leave of Kṛṣṇa, promising him that he would soon get an excellent son. Kṛṣṇa returned to Dvārakā. Bukmiṇi, after the tenth month, bore a son who is identified with Kāma, which exists in every creature and moves within the hearts of both gods and Asuras. Praise of Kṛṣṇa = Vishṇu Trivikrama = the thirty-three gods with Indra = Adideva (the first god), etc. Bhishma congratulated the Pāṇḍavas, especially Arjuna, and pitied Duryodhana; many Dai. and Dā. have been slain by Kṛṣṇa, witness Çiva's utterances (puṛuṣaṃ) on Himavat to R.; the greatness, etc., of Arjuna can only come up to one-third of that of Kṛṣṇa. Bhishma consoled Yudhishthira (it is Time = Kṛṣṇa who has slain the warriors), citing Vyāsa and Nārada. Nārada and Vyāsa have told me that "Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna (triyugau) practised penances in Badari for 10,000 years"; he mentioned his slaying of Kaṃsa; the destruction of the Kurus is due to Duryodhana, etc. (c). Yudhishthira remained silent; the kings with Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and R. with Nārada, applauded Bhishma and worshipped Kṛṣṇa. When Bhishma had rested and become refreshed, Yudhishthira once more asked him (XIII, 148).—§ 769: Vaiṣampāyana said: Yudhishthira asked Bhishma: who is the one god, which the foremost of all religions, and by what prayer does one become freed from the bonds of birth and transmigration (janmasaṃsāra-bandhanāt). Bhishma answered: "Always uttering the 1,000 names of the eternal Vishṇu Puruṣottama, the great Brahmān, etc., which were sung by the R." (v. 6949 wants in B.: Vishṇor nāmasahasasya Vedavyāso mahān rṣiḥ | Chando 'nushyup tatha Devo Bhagavān Devakīputaḥ). Then he enumerated Vishṇu's (= Kṛṣṇa's v. 7057 = Vasudeva's v. 7061, 7066, etc. = Kṛṣṇa's v. 7071) 1,000 names.* "The moveable and immoveable world with D., As., G., Y., U., and Rā., is under the sway of Kṛṣṇa; R., P., D., etc., have sprung from Nārāyaṇa; the Yoga, the Sāṅkhya, the crafts (çilpāḥ), the Vedas, the Çāstras, etc., have sprung from Janārdana; one should recite this hymn in praise of Vishṇu, composed (kirtitaṃ) by Vyāsa" (XIII, 149).—§ 770: Asked by Yudhishthira about the [mantra] which gives righteousness and success on setting out on a journey, or on entering [a new building], or at the commencement of any undertaking, or in sacrifices to D. and P., etc., Bhishma recited a mantra promulgated by Vyāsa and ordained by Sāvitṛi, and which purifies from all sins, and which was recited in days of yore by the foremost R. († v. 7088-9): Salutations (namaḥ) to Vasishṭha, etc. (a); the eleven Rudras (the lords of the three worlds) are: Ajaiṭapād, etc. (b); in Çatarudra they are 100; Aṃṣa, etc. (γ), are the twelve Adityas, the sons of Kaçyapa according to the Çruti; Dhara, etc. (δ), are the eight Vasus; Nāsatya and Daura are the two Açvins, the sons of Martāṇḍa, who came out of the nose of Saṅjñū; Mṛtyu, Kāla, V.-D., P. (endowed with forms), Mu., and Si. (devoted to penances and emancipation) are the invisible witnesses of all the good and bad acts of all beings, giving the regions of felicity (lokān stān) created by Prajāpati to those that praise them, and residing in all the worlds; by praising these 33 [i.e. 11 + 12 + 8 + 2] gods (the lords of all hosts of beings) [and] Nandiçvara, etc. (e), one is cleansed of all sins; the R. [called] Mānava are Yava-kṛita, etc. (z); blazing like Rudra, Anala, and the Vasus, they rejoice in heaven with the gods after having performed good deeds on earth; the seven gurus of Indra [i.e. presumably Yavakṛita—Bala Āngirasa] live in the East, and by praising them one enjoys felicity in Indraloka; Unnuu, etc. (γ), are the seven ṛtvijs of Dharmarāja [i.e. Yama], and live in the South; Dṛghyeu, etc. (δ), are the ṛtvijs of Vasura, and dwell in the West; Ātri, etc. (i), are the seven gurus of Kubera, and dwell in the North; there are seven other Mu. in all the quarters, bestowers of fame, etc.; Dharma, etc. (x), are upholders of the earth; Rāma, Vyāsa, Droṇa's son Açvatthāman, and Lomaça; these are the celestial munis, distributed into seven groups [of] seven; they are the creators of peace (śānti-) and good (-svasti-) and the regents of the quarters (diśām pālāḥ); one should turn his face in that direction in which one of these R. live, and take refuge with him; they are the creators of all creatures and the purifiers of the worlds [this is the order in B., where v. 7121: Rāmo Vydāsa . . . is placed before v. 7120: Śānti-svastikāḥ loka . . .]; Samvartta, etc. (including Saṃkhyā and Yoga) (λ), have practised severe penances and are celebrated over the three worlds; there are others resembling Rudra, in Brahmaloka, through whom the soulless obtains a son, and the poor obtains wealth; one should also praise Pṛthu, etc. (μ), [and] Saṃkhyā and Yoga, Havya and Kavya, and Supreme Brāhmaṇ; one should praise them morning and evening; then there is no fear from fire or thieves, nor from P. and Rā., etc.; P. eat that man's karya, and the gods his havya (so B.), who recites [these names: Sāvitrī, v. 7146, 7149, 7158; mahad brāhma Sāvitrīgunakīrtanam, v. 7150; Sāvitrīṃ paramam gatim, v. 7155; Sāvitrī brāhma śānvati, v. 7161] at his rites for D. and P.; they contribute to the peace (śāntim) of all the four castes; when setting out on a journey, etc., on every occasion one should recite them; it is a great mystery of R., etc. This ancient tale contains the opinion of the accomplished (siddhasya) Parācāra, and in former days was recited to Indra; [it is] the veritable eternal Brāhmaṇ, the heart of all creatures and the eternal ṛuṭi; all [the princes] of the race of Sūrya and of Soma, i.e. the Rāghavas and the Kurus, always recite it after having purified themselves (śucyāḥ); there is rescue from every calamity in always reciting [the names of] D., seven R. (Saptarāṣṭam), and Dhruva; [† v. 7157-8 are each of 38 syllables; † v. 7159-60 are each of 2 × 28 syllables]: the old B.-ṛ. Kācya, etc. (ν), have worshipped them; [being] the opinion of Bhāradvāja they were obtained by the sons of Roṭka; having acquired them again from Vasiṣṭha, Čakra and the Vasus vanquished all Dā.; the man who makes a present of 100 cows with their horns covered with gold to a learned brahman, and he who causes the excellent Bhārata story to be always recited, these two acquire [equal] merit; the benefits obtained by praising Bhṛgu, etc. (ξ) (XIII, 151).—§ 771: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira what course of conduct towards the various classes of persons is regarded faultless, Bhishma eulogised the brahmins, who are attentive to P., D., and guests; who eat the first portions of havya and kavya; who by their very eating rescue the three worlds from great fear; whose wealth consists in all the ṛikāḥ and the ṛuṭi; whose wrath yet burns in the Dandaka wood, etc. (XIII, 152).—§ 772: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira what is the reward attached to the worship of brahmins, Bhishma told the old narrative of a conversation between Pavana (the Wind) and Arjuna [Kārtavīrya]: Pavanārjunasamvāda (b) (XIII, 153-159).—§ 773: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira about the prosperity resulting from the worship of the brahmins, Bhishma, saying that the time of his death is not distant, and that he has recited all the duties mentioned in the Purāṇas, referred him to Kṛṣṇa (b) (XIII, 159). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira what prosperity results from the worship of the brahmins, Kṛṣṇa related what he in former times in Dvāravāṭi had answered his son Pradyumna, who was greatly excited by [some] brahmins and put this same question to him; they have Soma for their king. He related the visit of Durvāsas (c) (XIII, 160). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira about the knowledge he had acquired from Durvāsas, Kṛṣṇa said that he would recite that Čatarudṛitya which he repeats every morning, and which was composed by Prajāpati at the end of his penances. Then he praised Čiva (d) (XIII, 161-162).—§ 774: Vaiṣampāyana said: After Kṛṣṇa had said these words, Yudhiṣṭhira once more asked Bhishma which of the two, perception (pratyakṣam) or the scriptures (āgamaḥ), should be [regarded as] authoritative for arriving at a conclusion (kāraṇam bhavet): Bhishma answered that to affirm that perception is the only authority (as some persons do) is foolish; that knowledge which is derived from reasoning can scarcely be said to be knowledge.—Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira as to [which of these four is most authoritative, viz.] perception (pratyakṣam), inference (lokataḥ siddhir, i.e. anumānam, Nil.), the teaching of the scriptures (lokaḥ āgamaḥ pūrvaḥ), and the various kinds of good men's practice (śiṣṭādāro bahuvividhaḥ), he declared that as the might of unrighteous persons causes doubts to attach to perception, inference, and good conduct, good people who let themselves be led by the scriptures, and who are ever contented, should be resorted to for the solution of doubts.—As Yudhiṣṭhira remarked that, the veda, pratyakṣa, and dāro being all three pramāṇa (authority) [as to what is dharma, i.e. righteousness], the one dharma would become threefold, Bhishma answered that dharma is really one, though capable of being viewed from three different points; he should not engage in such [unfruitful] speculations, but simply follow his instructions like a blind man, knowing that righteousness consists in abstention from injury, truth, absence of wrath, and liberality, and that conduct towards the brahmins that has been observed by his sires and grandsires. The fool who would deny that to be authority that [has always been accepted as] authority, does not deserve to become an authority, for he creates [only] fright.—Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhishma said that those who hate righteousness have their hearts overwhelmed with passion and darkness and go to hell; those who observe righteousness go to heaven. The brahmins, who are the eldest sons of Brahmaṇ, represent righteousness, and, therefore, they are worshipped by the righteous as a ripe fruit by a hungry man.—Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhishma indicated the acts that are characteristic of wicked and good men (curious enumeration): the good never talk while eating, and never go to sleep with wet hands; two times have been appointed by the deities for taking food, viz. morning and evening; in the meantime, one should not eat anything; when following this rule, one is said to observe a fast; one who never approaches his spouse at any other time save after her courses, is said to observe the vow of brahmacarya; amṛta, brahmins, and kine are regarded as equal; one does not incur any fault by eating the meat of animals slain in sacrifices with mantras from the Yajurveda; the flesh of the backbone, or that of animals not slain in sacrifices, is as the flesh of one's own son; one should eat in privacy; well-cooked frumenty, yāvaka (B. yavūgām), kṛsāra (C. °śś°), and haviḥ [should be used in] the Aśṭakās of gods and P. and [in] worshipping the planets; one should not shave without calling down a blessing upon oneself; if one sneezes, he should be blessed ("čataṃ jīva," Nil.) by those present; having committed a sin, one should confess it in the presence of those that are good; they would then destroy it; one should achieve righteousness in private, not make a show of righteousness; those are traders in righteousness who draw profit from it; one should lay up for oneself a treasure in the world to come, consisting in gifts made [here] to deserving persons (XIII, 163). Yudhiṣṭhira observed that the acquisition of wealth very often seems to be independent of exertion and learning, etc.; Bhishma said that when one, notwithstanding great exertion, fails to earn wealth, he should practise severe austerities, make gifts, abstain from cruelty, etc.; then happiness will be obtained [in the next life]; unless seeds be sown, no crops appear; even in the case of insects and ants, their acts [of this and past lives] and Nature are the cause of happiness and woe [i.e., the explanation of what seems unintelligible to Yudhishtira is to be sought for in the actions in past lives] (XIII, 164); to put faith in righteousness is the mark of wisdom; Time [which is the supreme disposer of all things] can never make righteousness the cause of misery, and unrighteousness is incapable of touching righteousness, which is protected by time; righteousness is fraught with victory (XIII, 165).—§ 775: Vaiçampāyana said: Desirous of obtaining such goods as are destructive of sins, Yudhishtira questioned Bhishma, who was lying on a bed of arrows. Yudhishtira said: What is beneficial for a person in this world? how can one be freed of all one's sins? Vaiçampāyana said: In this connection Bhishma recited the names of the gods to Yudhishtira. Bhishma said: These names of the gods and It., if recited morning, noon, and evening, become purifiers of sins; then one has never to become blind or deaf, etc., and never takes birth as an animal or in the mixed castes, nor goes to Hell; the names of the gods and It., etc., rivers, mountains, etc.; Brahmān, etc. (α); the Aps. (β); learned brahmins in the eastern region (γ), in the southern region (δ), in the western region (ε), in the north (ζ); the principal kings (η) [to be recited at sunset and sunrise] (XIII, 166).—§ 776: Janamejaya said: When Bhishma was lying on a bed of arrows, and the Pāṇḍavas were sitting around him, my great-grandfather Yudhishtira heard these expositions of mysteries, etc.; what else did Yudhishtira do? Vaiçampāyana said: When Bhishma became silent, all the kings became silent; then Vyāsa, saying that Yudhishtira, etc., had now been restored to their own nature, asked Bhishma to give Yudhishtira leave to return to the city, which he did, giving Yudhishtira some final exhortations, and friendly asking him to return when the hour came for his death. Then Yudhishtira with his relatives and followers set out for Hāstinapura, and entered the city with Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, It., the citizens, the inhabitants of the country, and his counsellors (XIII, 167).

Anūdara, son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. § 131 (Amṣāvat.): I, 67, 2734.—§ 182 (Dhṛtarāṣṭra-putra-nāma-kathana): I, 117, 4547.

Anudātta ("the lower accent"), a Fire. § 491 (Āngirasa): III, 220, 14163 (Anudāttau, i.e. Udātta and Anudātta PCR., produced by Pūñcajanya from his arms), 14165 (son of Prāpa).

Anudyūta ("renewal of the gambling"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 319 (sc. parva, i.e. Anudyūtaparvan).

Anudyūtaparvan. § 302: When the Pāṇḍavas had left Hāstinapura with all their wealth and jewels, Duḥśāsana complained of it to Duryodhana, who, with Karṇa and Çakuni, quoting the words of Brhaspati when counselling Indra about politics, and declaring that the Pāṇḍavas would certainly revenge themselves, prevailed upon Dhṛtarāṣṭra to invite them a second time to a match of gambling between Yudhishtira and Çakuni, on the condition that the defeated party should repair to the woods for twelve years, dressed in deer-skins, and spend the thirteenth year in some inhabited country unrecognized, and if recognized, be exiled for another twelve years. If the Pāṇḍavas should succeed in observing this vow for thirteen years, the Dhṛtarāṣṭras would in the meantime have made alliances and have assembled an invincible army, so that they could defeat them if they reappeared. Droṇa, Somadatta, Bāhlika, Gautama, Vidura, Açvatthāman, Vaiçyāputra (i.e. Yuyutsu), Bhāriçravas, Bhishma, and Vikarṇa dissuaded in vain (II, 74).—§ 303: Gāndhārī reminded Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the counsel Vidura had given, when Duryodhana was born, to kill him, and recommended him to do it now, and not to let the gambling match take place, saying that it would cause the destruction of the whole race of the Kurus. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra could not act contrary to the will of his sons (II, 75).—§ 304: The royal messengers overtook Yudhishtira when he had already gone a long way. Yudhishtira having said, "Although a golden animal was an impossibility, Rājma suffered himself to be tempted by a golden deer," they returned. The gambling began on the above-mentioned conditions (cf. III, 1362 ff., where the conditions are stated somewhat differently), and Yudhishtira lost (II, 76). The Pāṇḍavas, casting off their royal robes, attired themselves in deer-skins. Duḥśāsana exulted, and exhorted Kṛṣṇa to abandon the fallen Pāṇḍavas and choose a husband among the Kurus. As Bhīma rebuked him and threatened to slay him with his followers, Duḥśāsana, dancing around, said, "O cow! O cow!" Bhishma again swore to drink his blood and to kill all the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. As the Pāṇḍavas were going away, Duryodhana mimicked the tread of Bhīma, who then said: "I will slay Duryodhana with my mace, and place my foot on his head. Dhananjaya will slay Karṇa, and Sahadeva will slay Çakuni, and I will drink the blood of Duḥśāsana." Arjuna and Sahadeva approved of it. Nakula, "the handsomest of men," vowed to kill all the Dhṛtarāṣṭras that had insulted Draupadī (II, 77).—§ 305: Yudhishtira bids farewell to Bhishma, Somadatta, Bāhlika, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Açvatthāman, Vidura, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the Dhṛtarāṣṭras Yuyutsu, Sañjaya, etc. Vidura kept Prithā in his abode, and consoled Yudhishtira: "Formerly thou wast instructed on the Himavat by Meru-Sācarṇi, in Vāraṇavata by Dvaipāyana, on Bhṛgutunga by Rāma, on the Dṛshadvatī by Çambhu, near Añjana by the great ṛṣi Asita, by Bhṛgu on the banks of Kalmāṣī; Narada always beholds thee, and this Dhaumya is thy purohita,—resolve to win victory like Indra, to control thy wrath like Yama, to give in charity like Kuvera, to control all passions like Varuṇa." So Yudhishtira went away, bowing to Bhishma and Droṇa, (II, 78). When Kṛṣṇa took leave of Kuntī, Kuntī broke out in complaints, and especially recommended her ever to keep her eye on Sahadeva. When Kuntī beheld her sons clad in deer-skins, surrounded by rejoicing foes, she embraced them and broke out in complaints, asking why Kṛṣṇa, who dwells in Dvārakā, and is without beginning and without end, does not deliver them from such woe. "O Sahadeva! cease to go! thou art my dearest child, O son of Mādrī!" The Pāṇḍavas, having consoled her, set out for the woods, and Vidura led her to his house. The ladies of Dhṛtarāṣṭra's house wept, blaming the Kauravas; and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, anxious, sent for Vidura (II, 79).—§ 306: Questioned by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Vidura described the attitude of the Pāṇḍavas, etc., when going away (a). The citizens cried out in grief, blaming the Kurus. Flashings of lightning and other terrible omens appeared. Narada appeared, surrounded by great ṛṣis, and foreboded that on the fourteenth year thence the Kauravas would all be destroyed by Bhīma and Arjuna. Then he disappeared through the skies. Duryodhana, Karna, and Çakuni offered the kingdom to Drona, who said that the Pāṇḍavas were incapable of being slain; that they would practise the brahmacharya for twelve years, and then return in anger; that he (Drona) would protect the *Dhrtarāshtra*s, who had sought his protection, to the best of his ability; but that he would himself be slain by Dhrishtadyumna, whom Drupada had obtained (together with Kṛṣṇa) from the fire by the ascetic power of Yāja and Upayāja; "it is widely known in the world that Dhrishtadyumna will slay Drona." Dhrtarāshtra sent Vidura to bring the Pāṇḍavas back, or, if they did not come back, to send them off with respect, with their weapons, cars, and infantry, etc. (II, 80).—§ 307: Saṅjaya spoke to Dhrtarāshtra about the perversity of his policy. Dhrtarāshtra related that when Kṛṣṇa was dragged into the court the grief was so great that the enraged brahmins did not that evening perform their agnihotra; he also related the omens which had appeared on the occasion, etc. (II, 81).

Anugītā ("repetition of the Bhagavadgītā"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 354 (parva . . adhyātmavivakam, i.e. Anugītāparvan).

[Anugītāparvan] ("the section containing the repetition of the Bhagavadgītā," the 94th of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. Anugītā). § 782: Janamejaya said: When Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, after having slain their enemies, dwelt there in the palace, what conversation took place between them? Vaiçampāyana said: Arjuna, having recovered his kingdom, spent his time joyously in the company of Kṛṣṇa in that beautiful palace. There they repaired to a particular part of the palace with their friends and relatives. Arjuna asked Kṛṣṇa to repeat to him what he had taught him before the battle [i.e. Bhagavadgītā], especially as he would soon repair to Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa is discontented because Arjuna cannot remember it; he would now, however, recite an old story upon the same topic. "There came a brahmin from Svargaloka and was honoured by us; hear what he said, asked by us." The brahmin said: There came a brahmin Kāçyapa, possessed of penance, etc., to some other brahmin, who had become conversant with all the authorities on religion, etc., crowned with ascetic success (siddham), able to move everywhere at will (kramamānaḥ), knowing the science of disappearing at will, roving with invisible Siddhas and celestial musicians (? cakradharaiḥ, PCR.); Kāçyapa honoured him as his guru, and the brahmin spoke to him about transmigration, comparing his own example; at last he had renounced the world and attained to his present success, and should not have to return to this world, but would come to "Brahman's eternal abode"; he promised to answer Kāçyapa's questions (XIV, 16). Kṛṣṇa said: Asked by Kāçyapa, the brahmin discoursed on how Jiva casts off and then attains to a body, how Emancipation is achieved, and where acts do exist when Jiva becomes divested of body, etc.; how death is brought about; the happiness and misery of Jiva determined by acts (XIV, 17); how Jiva enters the womb; Brahman first formed a body of his own, then he created Pradhāna, the material cause (prakṛtim) of all embodied creatures; indifference to pleasure and pain leads to the Supreme Seat (XIV, 18); who is said to be emancipated; on the science of yoga; how Jiva attains to emancipation.—Kṛṣṇa said: Then the brahmin disappeared; this discourse was, in fact, what thou (Arjuna) heardest on thy car; this is a great mystery even to the gods; at no time or place has this been heard by man in this world; by adhering to this religion, even those who are of sinful birth, women, vaiçyas, and çūdras, attain to the highest goal; yoga takes place in his case who devotes himself to its constant practice (nityayuktasya) for a period of six months (XIV, 19). In this connection the ancient narrative of a discourse between a married couple is cited: [Brāhmaṇagītā] (δ) (XIV, 20-34). Asked by Arjuna about Brāhmaṇ, Kṛṣṇa recited the old story of the discourse between a preceptor and his disciple on this subject: Guruçishyasamvāda (g). Asked by Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa said that he is the preceptor, and the mind his pupil; "formerly, when the hour of battle came, this very religion was declared by me; and now, it is long since I saw my father; I wish to see him again with thy leave."—Vaiçampāyana said: Arjuna replied: "We shall go to-day from this town to Hastinapura and inform Yudhishtira" (XIV, 35-51).—§ 783: Vaiçampāyana said: Kṛṣṇa caused Dāruka to yoke his car, and then set out for Hastinapura with Arjuna. Arjuna praised Kṛṣṇa, "the soul of the universe, etc.," as he had learned from Nārada, etc. (a), saying that Çrī is always established in him, and mentioning Duryodhana, etc. (β). Arrived at Hastinapura, they entered the palace of Dhrtarāshtra, where they saw Dhrtarāshtra, etc. (γ). Kṛṣṇa passed the night in the apartments of Arjuna. At morning they proceeded to Yudhishtira, who sat with his ministers; Yudhishtira mentioned Vasudeva (his maternal uncle), etc. (δ), and asked Kṛṣṇa to think of Yudhishtira, etc. (ε), and to come back to his horse-sacrifice. Kṛṣṇa took no gifts from him, took leave of Kuntī (his maternal aunt), Vidura, etc., and then set out from Hastinapura with Subhadra on the car, accompanied by Arjuna, Sātyaki, etc. (ζ); then, having caused them to return, he with Dāruka and Sātyaki proceeded to the city of the Ānarttas (XIV, 52).—§ 784: Arjuna repeatedly embraced Kṛṣṇa, etc. (omens). As he came to the desert, he beheld Utanka (b) (XIV, 53-58).—§ 785: Janamejaya said: What did Kṛṣṇa next do, after having granted that boon to Utanka? Vaiçampāyana said: Having granted that boon to Utanka, Kṛṣṇa, accompanied by Sātyaki, proceeded to Drākā on his car, passing many lakes and rivers and forests and hills. He came there when the festival of Raivataka had begun; the Raivataka hill shone with great splendour (description; the trees looked like the kalpa-trees of Indra's garden; the mountain looked like Meru); gifts were ceaselessly being made to the distressed, or blind, or helpless. Kṛṣṇa recounted the incidents of the great battle to his father (XIV, 59). Vasudeva said: Tell me about the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and Bhishma, etc. (a). Vaiçampāyana said: Kṛṣṇa narrated, also in the presence of his mother, how the Kaurava heroes had been slain in battle. Kṛṣṇa's narrative of the battle (β). Vaiçampāyana said: The Vṛshnis became filled with grief (XIV, 60). Kṛṣṇa had passed by the slaughter of Abhimanyu; Subhadra noticed it and fell down; Vasudeva then also fell down, and then asked Kṛṣṇa to tell the whole truth (γ). Kṛṣṇa consoled him (δ) (XIV, 61). Vasudeva and Kṛṣṇa, etc. (ε), made excellent obsequial offerings to Abhimanyu, and Kṛṣṇa fed six millions of brahmins and gave away heaps of gold, etc. Also the Pāṇḍavas at Hastinapura were filled with grief for Abhimanyu; Uttara totally abstained from all food, and her relatives feared for her embryo; Vyāsa came and predicted to Prthā, Uttara, Arjuna, and Yudhishtira, that the son of Uttara would become a great prince, through the influence of Kṛṣṇa and Vyāsa; Abhimanyu had gone to the regions of the gods. Arjuna became cheerful; the child in Uttara's womb grew like the moon in the bright fortnight; Vyāsa urged Yudhishtira to perform the horse-sacrifice, and disappeared; Yudhishtira set his mind on the journey for bringing wealth (XIV, 62). Janamejaya said: Having heard these words of Vyāsa, what steps were taken by Yudhishtira?—how did he succeed in obtaining the wealth of Marutta? Vaiṣampāyana said: Having heard the words of Vyāsa, Yudhishtira summoned all his brothers, reminding them of the words of Vyāsa, Bhishma, and Kṛṣṇa about Marutta's gold; Bhishmasena was of his opinion, saying that they must worship Īśa and his followers; then the Ks. who protected the treasures, would certainly yield; Yudhishtira was pleased; the others, headed by Arjuna, approved. The Pāṇḍavas ordered their army to march under the nakṣatra Dhruva (i.e. Rohiṇī, Nil.), and on the day Dhruva (i.e. Sunday, Nil.), and set out, having worshipped Īśa with modakas, frumenty, and cakes of meat, taking leave of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (κ), and keeping Yuyutsu in the capital (XIV, 63). Then they set out (description); arrived at the spot, they pitched their camp, placing the brahmins and Agniveśya (i.e. Dhaumya, Nil.) in the van; then the Pāṇḍavas and the other kings, and the brahmins and priests, having performed propitiatory rites, and placing the king and his ministers in the middle, caused the camp to be pitched by laying out six roads and nine divisions; king Yudhishtira caused a separate encampment to be made for the infuriated elephants; the brahmins declared this very day to be an auspicious one; on this day they would live upon water alone, and they should all fast; they passed the night on beds of kuśa-grass, listening to the discourses of the learned brahmins. When the cloudless morning came, the brahmins told Yudhishtira (XIV, 64) to make offerings to Īśa. Dhaumya performed the rites (description), and gave bali to the servants of Īśa; offerings were next made to Kubera, Maṇibhadra, and to the other Y. and lords of Bh. (with kṛcāra, and meat, and nivāpas mixed with sesame seeds); the king gave thousands of cows to the brahmins; then he ordered bali for the night-wandering Bh. Then the king, placing Vyāsa ahead, proceeded to the spot where the treasure was, once more worshipping Kubera, etc. (η). Numerous costly vessels were dug out and placed in wooden chests, etc.; there were 60,000 camels, 120,000 horses, and 100,000 elephants, etc. (description). Once more worshipping Īśa, they set out for Hastinapura with the permission of Vyāsa, and placing Dhaumya in the van, marched a goyuta (four miles, PCR.) every day (XIV, 65). Meanwhile, Kṛṣṇa with Pradyumna, etc. (δ), came to see Draupadī, etc. (ι), and was received by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (α). Uttarā gave birth to Parikṣit, who was born without life, afflicted with the Brahma weapon; Kuntī, etc. (λ), lamented, and Kuntī asked Kṛṣṇa, who came with Yuyudhāna, to revive him and rescue Uttarā, etc. (μ), reminding him that Abhimanyu had said to Uttarā that her son would learn the art of weapons, etc., by the Vṛshnis and Andhakas; Kṛṣṇa comforted her (XIV, 66). Then Subhadrā lamented (ν) (XIV, 67). Kṛṣṇa entered the lying-in room (description; with articles destructive of Rā.); Uttarā lamented (ξ) (XIV, 68), and so did Kuntī, etc. Kṛṣṇa touched water and withdrew the Brahma weapon, and “as Kaṁsa and Keçin have rightly been slain by me, etc.” (tena satyena), he revived the child (XIV, 69). Parikṣit illumined the lying-in room with his energy; Rā. fled or were destroyed; a voice in the sky applauded Kṛṣṇa; the Brahma weapon returned to Brahman; at the command of Kṛṣṇa the brahmins were made to utter benedictions;

Kuntī, etc. (ο), were glad and praised Kṛṣṇa, and so did wrestlers, actors, astrologers, etc.; Kṛṣṇa and the other Vṛshni chiefs made precious gifts to the child, whom Kṛṣṇa called Parikṣit (etymology). When he was a month old, the Pāṇḍavas came back with the wealth, and were received by those Vṛshnis and the citizens; Vidura ordered various kinds of worship to be offered to the gods in their temples, etc.; with dancers and singers, the city resembled the mansion of Kubera, etc. (description) (XIV, 70). Kṛṣṇa and his ministers went out to see the Pāṇḍavas, who entered the city together with the Vṛshnis, and worshipped Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (π), and also Kṛṣṇa, having heard how he had revived Parikṣit; after a few days Vyāsa came and was worshipped by the Vṛshnis and Andhakas, and he permitted Yudhishtira to perform the horse-sacrifice, “a purifier of all sinners.” Yudhishtira asked Kṛṣṇa to perform the sacrifice; but Kṛṣṇa told Yudhishtira to appoint them to whatever tasks he likes; “when thou sacrificest, Bhishmasena, etc. (ρ), will be sacrificing” (XIV, 71). Yudhishtira asked Vyāsa to cause him to be initiated; Vyāsa said that he and Paila and Yājñavalkya would perform the rites; the initiation would be performed on the day of full moon in the month of Caitra; “let sūtas and brahmins well versed in the science of horses select a worthy horse”; all the articles were duly procured; Vyāsa ordained that the sphya and the kūroa should be made of gold; “let the horse be loosened to-day.” Asked by Yudhishtira, Vyāsa ordained that Arjuna should protect the horse; Bhishmasena the kingdom aided by Nakula; Sahadeva should attend to all the relatives invited (with the permission of Dhṛtarāṣṭra); Yudhishtira asked Arjuna to spare all hostile kings as much as possible and to invite them to the horse-sacrifice (XIV, 72). Yudhishtira was initiated by the Ritvijs (description); the horse was let loose. Arjuna with Gāṇḍīva followed the horse; all Hastinapura came out wanting to behold him; a disciple of Yājñavalkya followed him in order to perform auspicious rites for him; and also many brahmins and kṣattriyas. During the horse's wanderings many great and wonderful battles were fought; the horse wandered over the whole earth; from the north it turned to the east: kings in myriads fought against Arjuna because they had lost their kinsmen on the field of Kurukṣetra, and innumerable Kirātas, Yavanas, Mlecchas, and Āryas; “I shall narrate only the principal battles” (XIV, 73). The Trigartas (the sons and grandsons of the slain) attacked Arjuna, who in vain asked them to forbear; the Trigarta king Sūryavarman & Arjuna, who slew Sūryavarman's younger brother Ketuvarman; Dhṛtavarman & Arjuna, who was wounded in his hand and let fall Gāṇḍīva, but took it up again and slew eighteen warriors; the Trigartas fled and accepted Arjuna's dominion (XIV, 74). In Pragjyotiṣa, Bhagadatta's son king Vajradatta (description) attacked Arjuna on his elephant, but, after a fierce battle (XIV, 75) lasting three days, he on the fourth day had his elephant slain, and he promised to come to the horse-sacrifice (XIV, 76). Recollecting Jayadratha, the Saindhavas, mounted on cars, attacked Arjuna, who was on foot; a terrible wind began to blow, and Rahu swallowed up both the sun and the moon at the same time, etc.; Kaikāsa began to tremble; the seven R. and the other R. of heaven breathed hot sighs; Indra's bow appeared in the sky, and clouds poured flesh and blood on the earth; Gāṇḍīva fell down; the gods, D.-r., Saptarishis, and B.-r. recited (jepuṣ) “victory” to Arjuna, who once more used his bow; the Saindhavas fled (XIV, 77), but once more rallied; Arjuna urged them to surrender, but in vain, because they only thought of Jayadratha; many were slain; then Duhçalā, taking her grandson, the son of Suratha [the son of Jayadratha], in her arms, repaired to Arjuna; Arjuna dropped his bow and asked about Suratha; she said that he had died from sorrow when he heard of Arjuna's arrival; she drew a parallel between Suratha's [orphan] son and Abhimanyu's [orphan] son Parikshit. Recollecting Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī, and censuring kṣhattriya practices and Duryodhana, Arjuna consoled and embraced her; Duhçalā asked her warriors to desist, and returned home. At last the horse arrived at Maṇipāra (XIV, 78), where Babhruvāhana, Arjuna's son by Citrāṅgadā, humbly approached Arjuna, together with a number of brahmins, bringing treasure in his van; Arjuna angrily blamed him for having neglected his duty as a kṣhattriya. Ulāpi came from within the earth and beheld her [step-]son standing cheerless, and incited him to fight Arjuna, which he did (description of his car); he even caused the sacrificial horse to be seized; gravely wounded, Arjuna praised his son highly; he cut off his standard, which was set with gold and resembled a golden palmyra, and then he slew his steeds; at last Arjuna fell down in a swoon, and so did Babhruvāhana; Citrāṅgadā repaired to the battlefield weeping piteously (XIV, 79); she indulged in copious lamentations, lost her senses, and fell down on the earth; regaining consciousness and seeing Ulāpi, she blamed her for having brought about Arjuna's slaughter by Babhruvāhana, and asked her to revive him; "I do not grieve for my slain son, I only grieve for my husband"; otherwise she would sit in prāya and die; the horse she had set free. Regaining consciousness Babhruvāhana lamented piteously, saying that now he had slain his father, he would wander over the earth, covering himself with his father's skin, or with the two halves of his head, as an expiation, or else he would die; he took an oath (touching water) that, if Arjuna was not revived, he would emaciate his own body, sitting on the field of battle; "I shall without doubt have to sink into hell; he who has slain a heroic kṣhattriya becomes purified by making a gift of 100 cows; I, who have slain my father, cannot be rescued." Ulāpi thought of the gem that has the virtue of reviving a dead man; the gem, thus thought of, came there; she said that Arjuna had not been vanquished by Babhruvāhana, but Ulāpi had exhibited this illusion for the benefit of Arjuna. As soon as the prince had placed the gem on the breast of Arjuna the latter revived. Indra poured down celestial flowers, etc. Arjuna wondered why the two ladies were present, and why everything seemed to indicate grief, and asked Babhruvāhana who told him to question Ulāpi (XIV, 80). Asked by Arjuna, Ulāpi recited the curse of the Vasus (approved by Gaṇḍa) because Arjuna had slain Bhishma in unfair fight (while he was engaged with Çikhaṇḍin and had ceased to fight); if Arjuna had died without having expiated his sin he would have fallen into Hell; hearing the curse of the Vasus, Ulāpi had consulted her father, who prevailed upon the Vasus that Arjuna should be freed from their curses when he had been slain by Babhruvāhana. Arjuna highly approved of Ulāpi's action, and told Babhruvāhana to come with his mother and counsellors and officers to the horse-sacrifice; Babhruvāhana promised to come and to take upon himself the task of distributing food among the brahmins (dvijātīpariveçakāḥ). He asked Arjuna to pass the night in the city with his two wives; but Arjuna was prevented by his vow of following the horse; he took leave and proceeded on his way (XIV, 81). The horse, having wandered over the whole earth, turned its face towards Hāstinapura. At Rājagṛha, the Magadha king Meghasandhi, son of Sahadeva, attacked Arjuna, who was on foot, from his chariot; Meghasandhi was worsted, but spared and told to come to the horse-sacrifice. The horse then proceeded along the sea-coast through the country of the Vāṅgas, Puṇḍras, and Koçalas; in these countries Arjuna vanquished innumerable Mleccha armies (XIV, 82). Arjuna proceeded towards the south. The horse came to Cuktimati, the beautiful city of the Cedis. Çarabha, the son of Çiçupāla, fought Arjuna, and then worshipped him. Then the horse came to the Kūçis, Aṅgas, Koçalas, Kirātas, and Taṅgaṇas; then to the Daçārnas, whose ruler Citrāṅgada was vanquished by Arjuna; then to the dominions of the Nishāda king, the son of Ekalavya, who was vanquished after a furious battle; then towards the southern ocean, where the Dravīdas, Andhras, Māhishakas, and Kolvagiroyas (B. Kolla°) were subjugated; then to the Surāshtras, Gokarna, Prabhāsa, and Draṇavati, where the Yādava youths were going to beat the horse, but were forbidden by King Ugrasena, who came to Arjuna with Vasudeva. Then the horse proceeded along the coast of the western ocean to the prosperous country of the five rivers; then to the Gāndhāras, where a fierce battle ensued with the Gāndhāra king, the son of Çakuni (XIV, 83), who wanted to avenge the slaughter of Çakuni; many Gāndhāras were slain; at last the king, disregarding Arjuna's peaceful advice, fought alone; Arjuna shot off his headgear; then he and all the Gāndhāras fled; the mother of the king and all the aged ministers came out and forbade her son to fight; Arjuna said he had spared him for the sake of Gāndhārī and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and told him to come to the horse-sacrifice (XIV, 84). The horse then turned towards the road that led to Hāstinapura. As these tidings reached the Kuru court through the intelligence-bearers, Yudhishtira rejoiced, and on the twelfth day of the bright fortnight of Māgha, under a favourable constellation, he summoned his brothers (°), and caused Bhīma to let learned brahmins select a beautiful spot for the sacrificial compound (description). Then Bhīma sent messengers to invite the kings of the earth; they brought gems, female slaves, horses, and weapons. All the foremost brahmins also came there with their disciples; likewise many dialecticians disputing with each other. All was made of gold. One hundred thousand brahmins were fed; many mountains of food, many large tanks of curds, and many lakes of ghee were seen there. The entire population of Jambudvīpa was collected together (XIV, 85). Yudhishtira appointed Bhīmasena to pay proper honours to the royal guests and to their attendants. Kṛṣṇa came with the Vṛkṣṇis, Baladeva, etc. (°); Kṛṣṇa told Yudhishtira about Arjuna (having heard it from a confidential agent of his in Dvāraka), that he had become very much emaciated, and that he was near at hand; he had warned against a carnage similar to that at the presenting of the Arghya, and he had especially recommended Babhruvāhana (XIV, 86). Yudhishtira enquired of Kṛṣṇa why Arjuna had to suffer such hardships in life; Kṛṣṇa attributes it to the elevation of Arjuna's cheek-bones; Draupadī looked angrily at Kṛṣṇa, who approved of her love. Bhīmasena, etc., became gratified with Arjuna's triumphs. A messenger announced the arrival of Arjuna, and was presented with large gifts. On the second day Arjuna entered the city (description); people said that he had surpassed even Sagara, etc. Arjuna saluted Yudhishtira, etc. (v). Babhruvāhana came with his mother and entered the abode of Kuntī (XIV, 87); Citrāngadā [and Ulapi] saluted Prthā, etc. (φ); Babhruvāhana saluted Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (χ); Kṛṣṇa gave him an excellent chariot and steeds, and the others likewise gave him presents. On the third day Vyāsa told Yudhiṣṭhira to commence the sacrifice, and to make the dakṣiṇā threefold. Yudhiṣṭhira underwent the dikṣā. The sacrifice was duly performed (description); 300 animals were tied to the stakes in addition to the horse; this sacrifice was honoured by the presence of D.-ṛ., G., Aps., Kp., and Ku.; there were the disciples of Vyāsa, etc. (ψ) (XIV, 88); having cooked the other animals, the priests sacrificed the horse; after having cut it into pieces (B. cooking), they caused Draupadī to sit near it; then the brahmins cooked its marrow; Yudhiṣṭhira and his brothers smelled the sin-destroying smoke of that marrow; the limbs (heart, tongue, breast, etc., Nil.) the sixteen ṛiṃjī offered into the fire. Vyāsa and his disciples eulogised Yudhiṣṭhira, who gave 1,000 crores of golden nishkas to the brahmins, and the whole earth as dakṣiṇā to Vyāsa; Vyāsa returned it to him, telling him to give the purchasing value instead; Yudhiṣṭhira said that the dakṣiṇā for the horse-sacrifice is the earth, and that he would enter the woods and tell them to divide it into four parts, one for each of the four principal priests (? cāturhotrapramāṇataḥ; PCR. "according to what is done in the cāturhotra sacrifice"); his brothers and Draupadī approved of his words, as did also a voice in the sky; Vyāsa and Kṛṣṇa prevailed upon him to retain the earth and give away millions of golden coins, trebling the dakṣiṇā for the horse-sacrifice; no other king would be able to accomplish what Yudhiṣṭhira thus did after the manner of Marutta; Vyāsa gave the wealth (the price of the earth) to the officiating priests, in four parts, and they distributed it among the brahmins, who were also permitted to take the ornaments of gold, etc.; the remaining wealth was allotted to kṣattriyas, Vaiśyas, Çādras, and Mlecchas. Vyāsa gave away his own share to Kuntī, who devoted it to various meritorious acts. Yudhiṣṭhira performed the final sacrificial bath, and dismissed the kings, etc. (ω), with proper honours and gifts. There were oceans of wine of different kinds, etc. (description); people of different realms speak of this sacrifice to this day. Then Yudhiṣṭhira entered his capital (XIV, 89).—§ 786: Janamejaya said: Tell me of any wonderful incident that occurred in the sacrifice of my grandfather. Vaiçampāyana related how a mongoose disparaged the sacrifice: Nakulākhyāna (δ); then the mongoose disappeared, and the brahmins returned home. "Thou shouldst not think highly of sacrifice; millions of R. have ascended to Heaven with the sole aid of their penances; abstention from injury, contentment, proper conduct, sincerity, penances, self-restraint, truthfulness, and gifts are each equal in point of merit to sacrifice" (XIV, 90). Seeing that kings are given to sacrifice, M.-ṛ. to penance, and learned brahmins to tranquillity, etc., Janamejaya cannot but think that nothing can be compared with the result of sacrifices, since Indra obtained the sovereignty over the gods by his many sacrifices; and when Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīma, and Arjuna resembled Indra, "why did then that mongoose depreciate Yudhiṣṭhira's horse-sacrifice?" Vaiçampāyana said: Formerly, when Indra was performing a sacrifice the R. felt compassion on the animals, and said to Indra that the slaughter of animals in sacrifices had not been ordained; according to the [true] scriptural ordinances the sacrifice should be performed with seeds of grain which had been kept for three years. As Indra did not accept their words, a great dispute arose; they referred to the Cedi king Vasu, who declared that a sacrifice may be performed with whichever of the two kinds of objects is ready; he therefore had to enter Rasātala; therefore no one should singly be relied upon, when a doubt arises, except Brahmān; gifts made by a sinful person and with wealth acquired by unrighteous means became lost; while men possessing the wealth of penances acquired great merit and proceeded to Heaven, by giving away, to the best of their ability, grains of corn, or roots, etc., or water or leaves. The same results are also won by compassion, brahmacarya, truthfulness, kindness, fertility, and forgiveness, which are the eternal foundations of eternal righteousness; having made gifts of articles lawfully acquired, Viçvāmitra, etc. (α), have attained to high success; those amongst brahmins, kṣattriyas, vaiśyas, and Çādras, who betake themselves to penances, and who purify themselves by gifts and other acts of righteousness, proceed to Heaven (XIV, 91). Janamejaya said: If Heaven is the result of wealth acquired by lawful means, please tell me all about it; thou hast told me the great result that accrued to the brahmin living by gleanings from his gift of powdered barley. Vaiçampāyana cited the old narrative of what occurred in former days at the great sacrifice of Agastya (ε).—Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana explained that the mongoose (v. Nakulākhyāna) with a golden head was Dharma, who had been cursed by P., but freed from his curse by disparaging himself in the form of Yudhiṣṭhira; "the mongoose disappeared there in our very sight" (XIV, 92).

Anugotr, a Viçvadeva. § 749 (Ānuçāsanik): XIII, 91γ, 4362.

Anuḥa. § 6 (Anukram): I, 1, 226 (belongs to the past).

Anuḥlāda (B. °hrā°), son of Hiraṇyakaṣipu. § 89 (Hiraṇyakaṣipu): I, 65, 2526.—§ 130 (Amṣāvat): 67, 2643 (incarnated as Dhṛṣṭaketu).—Cf. Daitya.

Anukampaka. § 678b (Mokṣadh): XII, 257, 9150. Bhīṣma said: In the Kṛta-age king Anukampaka (B. Akampana) had been brought under the sway of his foes in battle, and his son Hari, who was like Nārāyaṇa himself, had been slain in that battle with all his followers and troops. The king devoted himself to a life of tranquillity. Nārada told him Mṛtyuprajāpatisampvāda (c).—Cf. § 594 (Akampana).

Anukārin = Çiva (1000 names?).

Anukarman, a Viçvadeva. § 749 (Ānuçāsanik): XIII, 91γ, 4357.

Anukramanī ("table of contents"), the first chapter (Anukramanikā-parvan) of Mahābhārata, perhaps also the second (Parvasaṅgrahaparvan): I, 1, 256.—Compare Anukramanikādhyāya; Parvanukramanī.

Anukramanikādhyāya(h) ("table of contents chapter"), cf. Anukramanī: I, 1, 102 (= Parvasaṅgraha?), 255 (i.e. Anukramanikā-parvan?).

[Anukramanikā-parvan], the first of the minor parvas (cf. Anukramanī). § 1: The Sūta Ugraçravas (Sauti), son of Lomaharṣana, had heard the Mahābhārata, which had been composed by Vyāsa, recited—under the direction of Dvāipāyana (i.e. Vyāsa) himself—by Vaiçampāyana, disciple of Vyāsa, at the serpent-sacrifice of king Janamejaya, son of Parikṣit; he had thereupon undertaken a pilgrimage to the tīrthas (holy places) and visited Samantapañcaka (δ); thence he came to the twelve years' sattra (long sacrifice) of Çaunaka in the Naimisha forest, where he related the Mahābhārata, (§ 2) beginning with the adoration of Vishnu identified with the Absolute (Brahmān), and (§ 3) a brief exposition of the creation and succession of beings from the Absolute through Brahmān, the 21 Prajāpatis (α), gods, etc. (β), down to the families of the Kurus, etc. (γ), mentioned in the poem.—§ 4: The Mahābhārata contains an enlarged and an abridged form; some make it begin with Manu (i.e. I, 75, 18 = 3143; otherwise Nīl.), some with Āstika (i.e. I, 13, 1 = 1020), and some with Uparicara (i.e. I, 63, 1 = 2334) (v. 52). Vyāsa had composed the Mahābhārata in a moment, and, at the counsel of Brahmān, had Gaṇeṣa to write it down as fast as he dictated to him. (An enumeration of the first sixteen books is contained in v. 88–91.) The portion destined for men (100,000 śloka out of six millions) he taught Vaiçampāyana, who narrated it in the intervals between the parts of the serpent-sacrifice of Janamejaya, first giving a survey of the principal contents (α), partly in the form of a conversation between Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Sanjaya.—§ 5: Sanjaya, in order to console Dhṛtarāṣṭra, first enumerated 24 great kings (α), who were formerly mentioned by Nārada to Çaivya (B. Çvaitya) when lamenting the loss of a son, and thereupon (§ 6) 66 others (α), who had all died.—§ 7: He, who hears or reads the Mahābhārata, is purified from the most atrocious sins (261 ff. = 254 ff.).

Āpaddharma ("the duties in need"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 1, 351 (°aḥ parva).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 595 (°aḥ), i.e. Āpaddharmaparvan.

[Āpaddharmaparvan] ("the section relating to the duties in cases of need," the 89th of the minor parvas of Mbhbr.; cf. Āpaddharma). § 642: Yudhishtira enquired of Bhīshma what should be done by a weak and timid king, as also by one that is in great distress. Bhīshma's answer recommending peace and even the surrender of territory. The king should never surrender his person as long as he can avoid doing so. If the invading enemy be righteous, the assailed king should make peace; if otherwise, the assailed should fight bravely and fall (XII, 131). How a brahman should subsist in times of calamity. Bhīshma began his exposition of the moral standard of unlucky times; in times of calamity the king may take from the wicked and give it to the good; at such times censurable acts do not become censurable; the king should never oppress brahmans, even at such times. Slander should be avoided. The tests of righteousness; difficulty in finding the course of duty. "Some regard ancient usage as the highest test of righteousness; they that are in favour of the conduct of Caṅkha towards Likhita do not hold this opinion" (XII, 132). How a king should fill his treasury. The king should establish laws which he should never transgress (XII, 133). The two duties of a kshatriya are the acquisition of religious merit and of wealth. The advantages of Power (XII, 134).—§ 643: The old story of a robber who having in this world been observant of restraint did not meet with destruction in the next: Kāyavya-carita (b) (XII, 135).—§ 644: What wealth should not be taken by the king (XII, 136).—§ 645: Who enjoy happiness: Çākulopākhyāna (b) (XII, 137).—§ 646: How a king should behave who is weak and threatened on all sides by powerful foes: the old story of the mouse, the cat, the owl, the mongoose, and the hunter, i.e. Mārjāra-mūshika-samvāda (b). The moral of the story (XII, 138).—§ 647: Bhishma related the conversation between the bird Pūjanī and king Brahmadatta, i.e. Brahmadatta-Pūjanī-samvāda (b) (XII, 139).—§ 648: How a king should behave when there is a general decadence of righteousness: the old story of the discourse between Bhāradvāja and king Çatruñjaya, i.e. Kaṇikopadeça (b) (XII, 140).—§ 649: How a brahman should live when there is terrible distress around. Bhishma said that the Kṛta, etc. (a), are all dependent on the king's conduct, citing the old story of the discourse between Viçvāmitra and the Cāṇḍāla in a hamlet inhabited by Cāṇḍālas. Towards the end of Tretā and the beginning of Dvāpara a frightful drought occurred extending over twelve years; the planet Brhaspati began to move in a retrograde course, and Soma receded towards the south, etc. (description); the brahmanas abstained from sacrifices and recitations of the Vedas, and no longer uttered vashats, etc.; the very Rishis, giving up their vows, began to wander hither and thither. M.-r. Viçvāmitra, leaving his wife and son, wandered fireless and homeless, and regardless of food, clean and unclean. One day he came upon a hamlet, in the midst of a forest, inhabited by cruel hunters, etc. (description of a Cāṇḍāla hamlet). Viçvāmitra, in rage of hunger, wanted to steal a dog's haunch ("theft is allowable in a season of distress even for an eminent person; . . . in the first place one should steal from a low person . . ."). He was discovered and harshly addressed by the owner; but when the Cāṇḍāla learned who he was he addressed him respectfully, and dissuaded him from eating dog's meat, as the dog is less clean than a jackal, and the haunch of a dog is much worse than other parts of his body; "only the five kinds of five-clawed animals are clean food for brahmanas and kshatriyas and vaigyas, as laid down in the scriptures" (yathācāstram). Viçvāmitra said that it is the duty of the brahmanas to behave like Agni (as it is the duty of the kshatriyas to behave like Indra), that the Vedas are fire, and that fire at times becomes a consumer of everything; "life is better than death; if living one may acquire virtue"; he mentioned that Agastya, when hungry, ate up the Aura Vātāpi ("a man who is a Rshi cannot do what is sinful"). Notwithstanding the warnings of the Cāṇḍāla, Viçvāmitra took away that haunch of dog's meat into the woods and wished to eat it with his wife, having gratified the gods and the Pitṛs; igniting a fire according to the Brahma rites and cooking a saru according to the Aindrāgneya rites, dividing the caru into due portions, he invoked the gods, including Indra. Meanwhile Indra began to pour rain copiously. Viçvāmitra, having completed the rites, himself ate that meat. Afterwards he destroyed all his sins by his penances and acquired the most wonderful success (XII, 141).—§ 650: Yudhishtira was distressed at the possibility of such acts of impiety being mentioned as a duty. Bhishma said that kings should gather wisdom from various sources, and not from the Vedas alone. Those who blame the injunctions of the scriptures, etc., are hucksters in learning and Rakshasas among men; it has been heard by us that the texts of morality cannot be understood solely by discussion or by one's own intellect; Indra has said that this is the opinion of Brhaspati; . . . in days of old Uçanas told the Daiteyas this truth, that scriptures are no scriptures if they cannot stand the test of reason; . . . the sin of killing a person is equal to the sin of not killing one that deserves to be killed. Indra has said that in times of distress the great duty of a king is chastising the wicked and protecting the good (XII, 142).—§ 651: Yudhishtira enquired after the merits of protecting suppliants. Bhishma, reminded of Çibi, etc., told the story (that purifies the heart from every sin) that Bhārgava (i.e. Rāma, PCR.) had recited to king Mucukunda, how a pigeon won success (siddhi), i.e. Kapota-lubdhaka-samvāda (b) (XII, 143-149).—§ 652: Requested by Yudhishtira about how a person can be purified after having committed sin from want of judgment, Bhishma related the old tale, applauded by R., of what the brahman Indrota Çaunaka said to Janamejaya, i.e. Indrota-Pārikshitiya (b) (XII, 150-152).—§ 653: Asked by Yudhishtira if he had ever seen or heard of any mortal restored to life after having succumbed to death, Bhishma related the story of the discourse between a vulture and a jackal as it had happened of old in the forest of Naimisha, i.e. Gṛdhra-gomāyu-samvāda (b) (XII, 153).—§ 654: Yudhishtira asked Bhishma as to how a weak king who incurs the wrath of a powerful one should behave in the hour of danger. Bhishma told the story of the discourse between Parana and the çālmali, who, having dared the Wind-god, saved himself by causing his branches to be lopped off: Pavana-çālmali-samvāda (b). "One should overlook the wrongs inflicted by a person of superior strength, and even consider them like the acts of a child, an idiot, or one that is blind or deaf. The eighteen akshauhīnīs were not equal in might to Arjuna" (XII, 154-157).—§ 655: Covetousness is the cause of sin; it is not known in its real nature by D., G., As., M.-U., etc. (XII, 158). Discourse on ignorance; it has its origin in covetousness; Janaka, etc. (a), acquired heaven in consequence of their having repressed covetousness (XII, 159). The moral laws laid down by M.-r. are many; the highest among them all is self-restraint; it surpasses charity and sacrifice and study of the Vedas (XII, 160). Penance (tapas) is the root of everything; by penance Prajāpati created the universe, etc., and R. acquired the Vedas and acquired their sixfold divine attributes (aicvaryam); renunciation (samnyasa) constitutes the highest penance (XII, 161). Discourse on Truth and its indications; it is applauded by brahmanas, R., and P.; it is yoga, it is Brahmān, sacrifice, etc.; it has been found to weigh heavier than 1,000 horse-sacrifices (XII, 162). Discourse on the thirteen vices that are powerful foes of all; all these thirteen faults stained the sons of Dhṛtarāshtra (XII, 163). The characteristics of malevolent persons (XII, 164). How brahmanas should be provided for. At the end of every year one should perform the Vaiçvānara sacrifice (ishtim Vaiçvānarīm). The practice of an act laid down in an alternative is not destructive of virtue; fearing death, V.-D., Sā., the brahmanas, and M.-r. make use of the alternative instead of the principal rule in seasons of distress. The five kinds of falsehood that are not sinful. The three sins that cannot be expiated. Acts that are never sinful ("amṛta, if extracted from poison, can be quaffed"). Different kinds of expiation for different kinds of sin (XII, 165).—§ 656: Questioned by Nakula, Bhishma related Khaḍgotpattikathana (q.v.) (XII, 166).—§ 657: When Bhishma became silent Yudhishtira returned home. Yudhishtira's question to Vidura and his own brothers about the three things (trivarga, i.e. virtue, wealth, and desire). Vidura assigned precedence to virtue. Arjuna assigned precedence to wealth (or profit). Nakula and Sahadeva assigned the precedence to both wealth and virtue. Bhishma assigns precedence to desire ("it is from desire that R. devote themselves to penances"). Yudhishtira applauded withdrawal from the three things, recommending emancipation (moksha) ("we do not know, however, what emancipation is") or extinction (nirvāṇa), and quoted Brahman.—All of them were filled with delight and applauded Yudhishtira, who once more addressed Bhishma (XII, 167).—§ 658: Asked by Yudhishtira with whom friendship is delightful, Bhishma, having also stated with whom friendship should be avoided, related an old story that had occurred in the country of the Mlecchas, that lies to the north, about an 'ungrateful person, i.e. Kṛtaghnopākhyāna (b). Bhishma's observations on ingratitude (XII, 168-173).

Āpavopākhyāna ("episode relating to Āpava, i.e. Vasishṭha"). § 164 (cf. Bhishmotp): Gāṅgā fully related to Çāntanu the reason why the Brahmarshi Vasishṭha (or Āpava), the son of Varuṇa, had cursed the Vasus. When the Vasus, Prithu (or Dhara), etc., were wandering with their wives in the wood near Vasishṭha's hermitage, frequented by the devarshis, Dyaus was prevailed upon by his wife (assisted by his brothers), in the interest of her friend Jitavati, daughter of Uçinara, to steal Vasishṭha's homadhenu [Nandini] (daughter of Kacyapa and Surabhi, the daughter of Dakṣha), by drinking whose milk one could remain in unchanged youth for 1,000 years. Vasishṭha, however, was prevailed upon to let among them Dyaus alone (who was to be conversant with all çāstras, etc.) dwell on earth for a long time without marrying. Then Gāṅgā, taking with her the child (Gāṅgeya or Devavrata, i.e. Bhishma), went away, and Çāntanu returned to his capital—"I shall now recount the virtues of the Bhārata Çāntanu, whose splendid story is called the Mahābhārata" (I, 99). III, 311–315). § 548: Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related what the Pāṇḍavas did after having rescued Kṛṣṇā (from Jayadratha). The Pāṇḍavas left Kāmyaka and returned to Dvaitavana with Kṛṣṇā. Once a deer carried off a brahman's araṇi and mantha, was pursued by the Pāṇḍavas, and suddenly became invisible. Bhīma repented that he had not slain the pratikāmin, Arjuna that he had not slain Karna, and Sahadeva that he had not slain Çakuni. Nakula, Sahadeva, Arjuna, and Bhīma were successively sent to fetch water, but caused to drop down dead by a Yaksha. The brahman (yatis, munis) went back to their homes, and the Pāṇḍavas and Dhaumya set out with Kṛṣṇā, and the next day proceeded for a kroça, and then sat down in order to take counsel of each other.

Aranyakaparvan ("section relating to the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas," the 30th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). § 308: The Pāṇḍavas set out from Hastinapura through the Vardhamāna gate with their weapons, accompanied by Kṛṣṇā, in a northerly direction. Indrasena and other servants, 14 in number (see BR. s.v. pari; Nil. and PCR. take it to be = 15), with their wives, followed them on swift cars. The citizens wished to leave the town and follow them, but were prevailed upon by Yudhishtira to return and cherish Bhīṣma, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Vidura, Kuntī, etc. About the close of the day the Pāṇḍavas reached the banian Pramāṇa on the banks of the Gaṅgā, purified themselves by touching the water, and passed the night there, taking water alone as their sole sustenance, in the company of brahmins with and without fire, who had followed them (III, 1). When the day broke in, Yudhishtira tried to prevail upon the brahmins to leave him, in order that they might not undergo sufferings, living on fruits, roots, and deer. But they declared that they would follow him, themselves providing their own food.—§ 309: Then a learned brahman, Çaunaka, versed in Sāṅkhya and Yoga, quoting the çlokas of Janaka, told Yudhishtira not only to retire from the world, but also in his heart not to mind the loss of his wealth. Yudhishtira declared that it was not from avarice, but only because he could no more support the brahmins, that he regretted his wealth; "nobody should cook his food for himself alone, and nobody should slay an animal without devoting it to the gods, the pitrs, and guests, nor should one eat of that food which had not been duly dedicated to the gods and the pitrs." Çaunaka said that sacrifices, study, gifts, and penance pave the way to the world of the Pitrs—truth, forgiveness, subduing the senses, and renunciation of desire to the heaven of the gods, and they should be practised without reference to self (abhimāna). It was by their wealth of yoga that the Rudras, Sadhyas, Ādityas, Vasus, and Āśvins rule over the creatures. So Yudhishtira, who had already achieved success as to his indebtedness towards his ancestors and as to sacrifices, now ought to seek success in yoga and in ascetic austerities; then he would be able to realize all his wishes (III, 2).—§ 310: Yudhishtira then, having consulted Dhaumya, was taught by him (as Bhīma, Kārtavīrya, Vaisya, and Nahusha had by ascetic meditation delivered the people from affliction) 108 names of Sārya (a), [originally] proclaimed by Svayambhū (i.e. Brahman)* (the Sun). Yudhishtira, touching the water of Gaṅgā, with his senses under control, and feeding upon air alone, stood engaged in prāṇāyāma, and began a hymn in praise of Sārya (b) (the Sun). The Sun then showed himself to Yudhishtira and gave him a copper vessel, saying that if Pāṇḍā (i.e. Kṛṣṇā) kept this vessel fruits, roots, meat, and vegetables, cooked in their kitchen, would be inexhaustible for twelve years. Then the god vanished. Rising from the water, Yudhishtira took hold of Dhaumya's feet and embraced his brothers. The clean food that was dressed, however little, became inexhaustible, and only after the brahmins, the brothers, Yudhishtira, and at last Kṛṣṇā had eaten the day's food became exhausted. Having then performed sacrifices, they set out for the Kāmyaka wood, accompanied by Dhaumya and the brahmins (III, 3).—§ 311: Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura what they should do to secure the good-will of the citizens. Vidura said that he must give back to the Pāṇḍavas all that had been theirs, let Duryodhana, Çakuni, and Karṇa wait upon them, and Duḥçāsana ask their forgiveness in open court, and if Duryodhana would not consent to reign in peace jointly with Yudhishtira, he ought to abandon him and let Yudhishtira reign alone. Dhṛtarāṣṭra did not approve, and saying "stay or go, as thou listest," he suddenly rose and went away, and Vidura went away to the Pāṇḍavas (III, 4).—§ 312: Starting from the Gaṅgā, the Pāṇḍavas went to Kurukshetra, performed ablutions in the Sarasvatī, Drçadvatī, and Yamunā, and, travelling in a westerly direction, they arrived at the Kāmyaka wood on the Sarasvatī. There Vidura came to them in a single car. When seeing him, Yudhishtira was afraid that he brought an invitation to a new match at dice with Çakuni about their weapons. Vidura told them that he had been forsaken by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and gave them advice how to secure adherents (III, 5).—§ 313: After Vidura had gone Dhṛtarāṣṭra repented and fell down senseless, and having regained consciousness caused Sañjaya to bring Vidura back (III, 6). Duryodhana, being afraid because Vidura had returned, held counsel with Çakuni, Karṇa, and Duḥçāsana, who were of opinion that the Pāṇḍavas would remain the promised space of time in the wood. As Duryodhana, however, was not contented, Karṇa proposed to set out and slay them. When they had gone out Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana came upon them and commanded them to desist, and then appeared before Dhṛtarāṣṭra (III, 7). Vyāsa warned Dhṛtarāṣṭra against permitting Duryodhana to try to slay the Pāṇḍavas (III, 8).—§ 314: As Dhṛtarāṣṭra said he was unable to cast off his senseless son, Vyāsa told him: One day, when Indra saw Surabhi weeping in heaven, and asked her why she wept, she told him that one of her offspring (a cow) was exceedingly harassed by a husbandman; and although she had 1,000 offspring, and her affections flowed equally towards all, yet she felt greater compassion for the weak. Indra poured down a shower of rain and caused obstruction to the husbandman's work. "So I feel anxious regarding the Pāṇḍavas in distress; let thy affections be greater towards the weak, and let Duryodhana make peace with them" (III, 9).—§ 315: Maitreya-cāpa (q.v.) (III, 10).

The gods and ṛshis asked Vishṇu to kill him. On his celestial vimāna, Arjuna affronted Indra, when he was sporting with Çaçi. After having held a consultation with Indra, Vishnu went to his hermitage Badarī (for continuation v. Jamadagni), 10135 (Haihayādhīpatiḥ), 10140.—§ 397 (Jamadagni): III, 116: Once, when the sons of Jamadagni had gone out, Arjuna Kārtavīrya, the lord of the country near the sea-shore (Anūpapatīḥ), came to the hermitage, and, being received hospitably by Renukā (the wife of Jamadagni), carried off the calf of the homadhenu and pulled down the trees. As Jamadagni told Rāma this, Rāma rushed towards Arjuna, and cut down his 1,000 arms with his arrows, and killed him. The heirs of Arjuna came while Rāma was away, and shot Jamadagni to death with their arrows. When they had gone away Rāma returned to the hermitage (III, 116), 10195.—§ 398 (Paraçu-Rāma): III, 117: After having lamented for and cremated his father, Rāma vowed the slaughter of the entire kshattriya caste, killed Kārtavīrya's sons, etc.—§ 638b (Rāmop.): XII, 49: Meanwhile the virtuous kshattriya, the Haihaya king Arjuna Kārtavīrya, with 1,000 arms through the grace of Dattātreyā, having subjugated the whole earth with its mountains and seven islands, became a powerful emperor, and gave away the earth to the brahmins in a horse-sacrifice. Solicited by Agni, he once gave alms to that deity, who sprung from the point of his shaft, i.e. Agni burnt villages, etc., and he burnt also the retreat of Āpava (=Vasishṭha), who cursed Arjuna, saying that Rāma should lop off his arms. Always devoted to peace, always regardful of brahmins, etc., Arjuna did not mind that curse. His sons, always haughty and cruel, seized and brought away the calf of Jamadagni's homa-cow, without the knowledge of Arjuna. Rāma lopped off the arms of Arjuna and brought back the calf; the sons of Arjuna came and slew Jamadagni in the absence of Rāma, who vowed to free the earth of kshattriyas, and slaughtered all the sons and grandsons of Arjuna, and 1,000 Haihayas, and freed the earth of all kshattriyas, etc., 1750 (Kṛtavīryātmaḥ), Haihayādhīpatiḥ, 1757, 1758, 1759, 1763, 1764 (°aya sūtibh.).—§ 772b (Pavanārjunas.): XIII, 153ff: The Haihaya king Arjuna Kārtavīrya with 1,000 arms became the lord of this whole world (i.e. the earth), residing in Māhishmatī; he gave large gifts to Dattātreyā, who granted him four boons: that he should have 1,000 arms in battle, but only two at home; that he should subjugate the whole earth righteously; and reign with vigilance; and that whenever he might happen to go wrong, the righteous should set him right. A. now regarded himself as having no equal. An invisible voice said that the brahman is superior to the kshattriya; A. maintained that the brahmins take refuge with the kshattriyas; "I shall bring the skin-clad brahmins under my sway." Vāyu (Wind) warned A., addressing him from the air, etc. At last Arjuna praised the brahmins, mentioning Dattātreyā. Vāyu told him always to protect them; "a terrible danger threatens thee from the Bhṛgu; that will take place after a time," 7186 (Arjunasya samvādam Pavanasya ca), (7199), 7207, (7211); 154, 7225; 157, 7291, 7305; 158, 7326, 7349, (7350).—§ 782c (Brāhmanagītā): XIV, 29, 818, (822): The 1,000 armed king Kārtavīryārjuna conquered the whole earth with his bow; once he showered hundreds of arrows at the ocean. The ocean asked him to desist, as he injured the creatures in the waters; Arjuna asked if there existed any bowman who was his equal in shooting. The Ocean named Rāma Jāmadagnya. Arjuna came and began to trouble him; Rāma burnt his troops and prostrated him with his battle-axe and drove away his kinsmen to the mountain fastnesses; their progeny became Vṛshalas owing to their inability to find brahmins: so the Dravīdas, etc. Cf. Paraçu-Rāma (ḍ).—Cf. also Anūpapati, Haihaya, Haihayendra, Haihayādhīpati, Haihayarshabha, Haihayācreshṭha, Kārtavīrya.

After Pāṇḍu had been cursed, that he should have no progeny, he caused Dharma to procreate Yudhisṭhira in Kuntī, then Vāyu to procreate Bhīmasena, and then Indra to procreate Arjuna.—§ 190d (Pāṇḍavotp.): I, 123: In order to propitiate Indra (before summoning him), Pāṇḍu, took counsel with the maharshis, and caused Kuntī to observe an auspicious vow for a full year, while he himself began to stand upon one leg, etc. After the birth of A. a bodyless voice said that he should subjugate the Madras, the Kurus, the Somakas, the Cedis, the Kāçis, and the Karūshas, and satiate Haryavāhana (Fire) in the Khāṇḍava wood with the fat of all beings, and, with his brothers, perform three sacrifices; in battle he would gratify Çāṅkara, and receive from him the Pāçupata weapon, and, at the command of Indra, slay the Nivātakavacas, and acquire all sorts of celestial weapons: 4791, 4795.—§ 191: On hearing this voice, the ascetics dwelling on Çataçṛṅga became exceedingly glad. There was heard the sound of dundubhis, and flowers were showered down. The various tribes of celestials (devagāṇāḥ), etc. (a), came there (enumeration, among others, of Devagandharvas, Apsarasas, the twelve Adityas, the Rudras, the Vainateyas). Then the Açvins procreated the twins Nakula and Sahadeva in Mādri.—§ 192 (Pāṇḍavotp.): I, 124, 4854 (the third son of Kuntī). Having been procreated on Çataçṛṅga in behalf of Pāṇḍu by the gods Dharma (Yudhisṭhira), Vāyu (Bhīmasena), Indra (Arjuna; the mother of these three was Kuntī), and the Açvins (Nakula and Sahadeva, who were twins and sons of Mādri) in Pāṇḍu's wives Kuntī and Mādri, the five Pāṇḍavas after the death of Pāṇḍu were brought to Hāstinapura and educated by Droṇa, under the supervision of Bhīshma. Their cousins (the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra) hated them, especially Duryodhana, who tried to murder Bhīmasena and later on all the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī (Mādri had burnt herself with the corpse of Pāṇḍu), and Karna hated Arjuna from jealousy.—§ 203b (cf. Droṇa): I, 132: One day Droṇa asked his pupils to promise to accomplish what he had on his heart; only Arjuna promised it. Arjuna became the foremost of all his fellow-pupils. Droṇa gave every one of his pupils a narrow-mouthed vessel (kamaṇḍalu) for fetching water, in order that much time might be spent in filling it, but to Açvatthāman he gave a broad-mouthed vessel (kumbha), and in the intervals so gained he used to instruct his son in several superior methods; but Arjuna filled the vessel by means of the Vāruṇa weapon, and used to come at the same time as Açvatthāman. Droṇa told the cook never to give Arjuna his food in the dark, but not to tell him that it was he (Droṇa) that had ordered this. One day a wind put the lamp out when Arjuna was taking his food; but his hand went up to his mouth from habit. His attention being thus called to the force of habit, Arjuna practised with his bow in the night, and Droṇa promised him that there should not be a bowman equal to him in the world. He taught him also to fight on horseback, etc., with the mace, etc.: 5217, 5218, 5224, 5225, 5230, 5232, 5233, 5238.—§ 204 (Ekalavyu): I, 132, 5252 (Droṇa took from Ekalavya as his fee the thumb of his right hand in order that he might not surpass Arjuna).—§ 205 (cf. Droṇa): I, 132, 5273, 5274: Arjuna excelled everyone in every respect, and alone became an atiratha ("a charioteer capable of fighting at one time with 60,000 foes," PCR.).—§ 206 (Droṇa): I, 132f, 5293, 5296. One day Droṇa caused an artificial bird to be placed on the top of a tree, and first repeatedly asked Yudhishtira to tell what he did see, while aiming at the bird. He answered that he saw the tree, Droṇa, his brothers, and the bird. Droṇa reproachfully told him to stand apart. Then Droṇa repeated the experiment with his other pupils, with the same result (ch. 132). At last Arjuna's turn came; he said first that he saw only the vulture, and then that he saw only its head, and, when Droṇa gave the order, he struck off its head with his shaft (I, 133).—§ 207 (do.): I, 133: Arjuna rescued the life of Droṇa by shooting with five arrows an alligator in the Gaṅgā that had seized his thigh. Droṇa gave him the weapon Brahmaçiras on the condition that he should not use it against a human foe, as it might burn the whole universe.—§ 208 (cf. Astradarçana): I, 135: Then Arjuna appeared, while Kuntī wept with joy, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra learned from Vidura who it was. By the Āgneya weapon Arjuna created fire, by the Vāruṇa water, by the Vāyavya air, by the Pārjanya clouds; by means of the Pārvata a mountain came into being (v. 5366, read with V. "abhavadgiriḥ" or with B. "aṣṛjadgiriḥ"), and by the Antardhāna weapon it again disappeared, etc.; he at one time shot five shafts together into the mouth of a moving iron boar, and discharged twenty-one arrows into the hollow of a cow's horn hung up in a rope and swaying to and fro (v. 5370, instead of "bale" read with B. and V. "cale").—§ 208 (Astradarçana): I, 137, 5440, 5442: At the show of arms Karna in vain challenged Arjuna.—§ 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5484, 5492, 5499, 5500, 5501. Arjuna helped Droṇa to subjugate Drupada, which favour Droṇa had asked as his fee.—§ 210 (cf. Sambhavadparvan): I, 139: Droṇa taught Arjuna Brahmaçiras (that he had learnt from Agniveça, the disciple of Agastya), on the condition that he should not hurl it at any human being (cf. § 207), and obtained from him as his fee the promise that he would fight with him [in the great battle]. Then Arjuna went away to the northern region.—§ 211 (Sambhavad): I, 139, 5537, 5538. Headed by Arjuna, the Pāṇḍavas in war slew Sauvira, who had performed a three years' sacrifice at the inroad of the Gandharvas. The Yavana king, whom even Pāṇḍu had failed to subject, was subdued by Arjuna; as was also the Sauvira Vitula (B. Vipula), who had always shown a disregard for the Kurus; and the Sauvira Sumitra, called Dattāmītra (LIA. i, pp. 656/804, n. 2); assisted by Bhīma, Arjuna with only a single chariot subjugated all the kings of the east (prācyāḥ) backed by 10,000 chariots; and in the same way the south. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sentiments towards the Pāṇḍavas suddenly became poisoned, and from anxiety he could not sleep (I, 139).—§ 213 (Jatugrhap): I, 161, 5911 (has escaped from the lac house).—§ 214 (Hiḍimbav): I, 154, 6019, (6027), (6034), 6039 (A. offered to assist Bhīmasena against Hiḍimba, and exhorted him to kill him without delay; then he caused the Pāṇḍavas to proceed to a town not far off); 156, 6096.—§ 217 (Caitrarathap): I, 166, 6346 (a brahman related how Bhīshma prevailed upon Droṇa to teach the princes, etc.; both Arjuna and the others promised to do whatever he might ask as his fee, etc.).—§ 219 (do.): I, 168, 6419 (the brothers set out for the town of Drupada).—§ 221 (do.): I, 170, (6451), (6462), (6472), 6474, (6493), 6499 (while the Pāṇḍavas were wandering from Ekacakrū to the town of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna walking before them torch in hand, the Gandharva king Citraratha opposed them at the Gaṅgā, but was vanquished by Arjuna, whom he then gave the Gandharvic māyā called Cākshuṣhī, and on whom and each of his brothers he bestowed 100 Gandharva horses; he gave them the counsel to select a fit purohita; Arjuna in return gave him the Āgneya weapon).—§ 222 (Tapatyup): I, 171, (6516) (as Citraratha had called A. Tāpatya, Arjuna caused him to relate Tapaty-upākhyāna). 173, 6633 ("their son was Kuru, the ancestor of Arjuna").—§ 223 (Vāsishṭha): I, 174, 6634 (Citraratha told Arjuna about Vāsishṭha). 175, (6649), 6659 (Citraratha related the hostilities between Viçvāmitra and Vāsishṭha to Arjuna).—§ 229 (Vāsishṭhop): I, 182, (6888) (asked by Arjuna, Citraratha related why Kulmāshapāda commanded his queen to go to Vāsishṭha, etc.).—§ 230 (Dhaumyapuroh): I, 183, (6913), 6915 (according to the counsel of Citraratha, the Pāṇḍavas installed Dhaumya as their purohita, and resolved to go to the svayamvara of Kṛṣṇā).—§ 231 (Svayamvarap): I, 184: The Pāṇḍavas went to the Pāṇḍala land in the company of brahmanas who told them of the svayamvara, etc.). 185: On their way they beheld Vyāsa; they took up their quarters in the house of a potter; and adopting the brahmanical profession, they began to lead an eleemosynary life. Drupada always wished to bestow his daughter on Kiṛiṭin (i.e. Arjuna), and therefore caused a very stiff bow to be made which was incapable of being bent by anybody except Arjuna.—§ 233 (do.): I, 187: When Duryodhana, etc., had in vain tried to string the bow, and Karna, though having succeeded in stringing it, had, as a sūta, been rejected by Kṛṣṇā, Jishnu (i.e. Arjuna) came forward. 188, 7049, 7051, 7052: Some of the brahmanas spoke reproachingly of Arjuna's daring undertaking, some approved of it. Bending his head unto Īçāna and remembering Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna accomplished the task; Kṛṣṇā approached Arjuna, who soon after left the lists, followed by her.—§ 234 (do.): I, 189, 7075, 7080: When Drupada expressed his desire of bestowing his daughter on that brahman the kings resolved to slay Drupada and burn Kṛṣṇā, but spare Arjuna, whom they took for a brahman; Arjuna and Bhīmasena rescued them; Kṛṣṇa knew the Pāṇḍavas. 190, 7086, 7094, 7098, 7099: Karna is defeated by Arjuna ("accomplished in the Brāhma and the Paurandara weapons," v. 7105), etc. Bhīmasena and Arjuna with difficulty escaped from the throng, followed by Kṛṣṇā.—§ 235 (do.): I, 191, (7138), 7141: When they came with Kṛṣṇā, Kuntī said "enjoy ye all"; Yudhishtira declared that Arjuna should wed her, but agreed that she should be the common wife of them all.—§ 236 (do.): I, 192: Dhṛṣṭadyumna secretly followed Bhīmasena and

Arjuna, and from their conversation learned who they were.—§ 237 (Vaivāhikap.): I, 193, 7192: Dhṛṣṭadyumna related what had happened; Arjuna is said to have large red eyes (v. 7175); from their conversation he concluded that they were the Pāṇḍavas of whom it had been heard that they had all escaped from the house of lac. 195, 7226, 7235, 7237: Drupada vowed to restore Yudhishtira on his paternal throne; he became very perplexed at the project of marrying Kṛṣṇā to all the five brothers; meanwhile Vyāsa arrived.—§ 241 (Vidurāgam.): I, 200, 7367: Vidura and Dhṛtarāṣṭra became glad at the Pāṇḍavas having won Kṛṣṇā; but Duryodhana and Karṇa tried to stir Dhṛtarāṣṭra up against them. 201, 7408: Duryodhana proposed several means of getting the better of the Pāṇḍavas, etc.—§ 244 (Rājyalābhap.): I, 207, 7547: Dhṛtarāṣṭra caused the Pāṇḍavas together with Kuntī and Kṛṣṇā to repair to Khāṇḍavaprastha (Indraprastha), giving them half the kingdom.—§ 247 (Arjunavanavāsap.): I, 213, (7774): The Pāṇḍavas reigned in prosperity at Indraprastha; once Arjuna, having violated an established rule regarding Kṛṣṇā, set out to live twelve years in the forest.—§ 248 (do.): I, 214, (7796), 7804: Arjuna was drawn away to the bottom of the water by Ulūpi (upon whom he begat a son); she said that he would be invincible in water.—§ 249 (do.): I, 215: A. visited many tirthas, married Citrāṅgādā at Muṇipūra, where he dwelled for three years; she gave birth to a son.—§ 250 (do.): I, 216f, 7850: A. visited the tirthas of the southern ocean, where he liberated the apsaras Vargā, etc., in Nārtitirthāni.—§ 251 (do.): I, 218, 7890, 7894: A. visits Kṛṣṇa.—§ 252 (Subhadrahāhar.): I, 219, 7920, (7923), 7928, 7929. 220, 7961: A. carried away Subhadrā, the sister of Kṛṣṇa.—§ 253 (Haraṇāharanap.): I, 221, 7969, 7987, 8032, 8039, 8048: Kṛṣṇa reconciled A. with the Bhojas, etc.; A. married Subhadrā and passed a whole year at Dvārakā; then Kṛṣṇa remained for some time with A. at Indraprastha; Subhadrā brought forth Abhimanyu, who became the favourite of Kṛṣṇa and from his father acquired the Dhanurveda. Kṛṣṇā also obtained five sons (Çrutakarman by Arjuna), who, after having studied the Vedas, from Arjuna acquired knowledge of all weapons celestial and human.—§§ 254–260 (Khāṇḍavadah.): I, 222–234: 224, 8161, 8167; 225, 8201, (8203); 227, 8238, 8245, 8247, 8275, 8278, 8282; 228, 8298, 8301, 8308, 8309, 8310, 8312, 8317, 8322, 8326; 234, 8466, 8476, 8478: Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna assisted Agni in burning the Khāṇḍava forest; Agni caused Varuṇa to give Arjuna the Gāṇḍīva bow, two inexhaustible quivers, and a car yoked with horses; then Agni gave Kṛṣṇa the discus Sudarçana; Varuṇa gave Kṛṣṇa the mace Kaumodakī; Indra in vain poured down showers of rain in order to prevent the burning. An incorporeal voice said that Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, being really the old ṛṣhis and gods Nara and Nārāyaṇa, were invincible. Indra appeared and promised to give Arjuna all his weapons (both the Āgneya and the Vāyavya), when Mahādeva had been pleased by him; he granted Kṛṣṇa that his friendship with Arjuna should be eternal. The car (I, 8183 ff.) which Varuṇa gave to Arjuna was furnished with celestial weapons, etc., and incapable of being vanquished by gods or Asuras; its banner bore a large monkey; the car was drawn by horses white as silver, born in the region of the Gandharvas (Gāṇḍharvaiḥ), and harnessed with gold, and in speed resembling the wind or the mind; its splendour was great, and the sound of its wheels was tremendous; it had been created by the

Prajāpati Bhaumana (Viçvakarman) after severe ascetic meditation; no one could gaze at its splendour; it was the very car riding upon which Soma had vanquished the Dānavas; it was furnished with an excellent flagstaff of golden colour, upon which was seen a celestial ape apparently bent upon burning everything it beheld; and upon the flags were seen various creatures of large size whose roars and yells caused the enemy's soldiers to faint.—§ 261 (Sabhākriyāp.): II, 1, (3), (6): Maya asked Arjuna to tell him what he was to do for him because he had been rescued by him in the Khāṇḍava forest; Arjuna told him to do something for Kṛṣṇa, who causes him to build a palace for Yudhishtira.—§ 262 (do.): II, 2, 37 (Kṛṣṇa departed for Dvārakā).—§ 263 (do.): II, 3, 58, 78: Maya told Arjuna about the huge riches on Hiranyaçrṅga, and gave Arjuna the conch-shell Devadatta, etc.; the palace was constructed in fourteen months.—§ 264 (do.): II, 4, 128: Among those who waited on Yudhishtira in the palace were the princes who, dressed in deer-skins, learned the science of arms under Arjuna.—§ 272 (Rājasūyār.): II, 13, 557: Yudhishtira consulted his brothers, etc., as to the rājasūya; all people lived happily; Arjuna protected the people from enemies, etc.—§ 274 (do.): II, 15, 643: Deliberation about slaying Jarāsandha. 16, 661: Some objections made by Yudhishtira are refuted by A.—§ 275 (do.): II, 17, 676: Approving the words of Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa related the origin of Jarāsandha.—§ 276 (Jarāsandhavadhap.): II, 20, 774, 775, 787: A. set out with Bhīmasena and Kṛṣṇa to slay Jarāsandha.—§ 277 (do.): II, 21, 804: They entered the city of Girivraja in the guise of anātakas, etc. 24, 938, 954, 971: The combat between Bhīma and Jarāsandha having lasted for thirteen days, Bhīma killed him on the fourteenth night; they installed Jarāsandha's son Sahadeva as king of Magadha, then they returned to Indraprastha on Jarāsandha's celestial car; Kṛṣṇa set out for Dvārakā.—§ 278 (Digvijap.): II, 25, (984): Having obtained the bow, A., etc., prevailed upon Yudhishtira to let him subdue the north; A. set out on that celestial car which he had obtained from Agni and subdued the north, while his brothers subdued the other regions, and Yudhishtira stayed at Indraprastha.—§ 279 (cf Digvijayaparvan): Arjuna subdued the Kulindas, Anarttas, Kūlakūtas, Sumanḍala, and with him Çakala-dvīpa and king Prativindhya and the kings in Çakala-dvīpa and the Seven Islands (Saptadvīpashu, i.e. the Earth), and together with them he vanquished Bhagadatta, king of Pragjyotiṣa and friend of Indra, who was surrounded by Kirātas, Cīnas, and other warriors dwelling on the sea-coast; after eight days of combat, Arjuna prevailed upon him to give tribute to Yudhishtira at his will (II, 26), 999, (1007). Having vanquished all the mountain kings of the north, he subdued Brhanta, the mountain king dwelling in Ulūka, and with him Senāvindu; at the command of Yudhishtira, he stayed at Devaprastha, the city of Senāvindu, while his troops subjugated Modāpura, Vamadeva, Sudāman, Susāṅkula, and the Northern Ulūkas. Then, having vanquished the mountaineers, he conquered the town of the Paurava king Viçvagaçva; then the seven tribes of the Utsavasāṅketas, etc. Having conquered the Himavat and Nishkuṣa (? see BR.), he came to Çetaparvata (II, 27). Having crossed Çetaparvata, he subdued the country of the Kimpurushas ruled by Drumaputra, then by conciliatory proceedings the country named Hapaka defended by Guhyakas. Then he came to the Mānasa lake and all the sacred waters (rahikulyāḥ).

Then he conquered the region of the Gandharvas, and took as tribute from the Gandharva city horses spotted as partridges and named maṇḍukas ('frogs'). At the entrance to Northern Harivarsha he was encountered by huge guardians (dvārapālāḥ), who told him that this city could not be conquered, that he who entered it was sure to perish, that nothing might be seen there by one with a human body, for this was the abode of the Northern Kurus, but that they would do anything else he would ask of them. At his request they gave him heavenly clothes, etc., as a tribute for Yudhishtira. Then he returned to Indraprastha, and gave all he had won to Yudhishtira (II, 28), 1048, 1051.—§ 286 (Rājāsūyikā): II, 33, 1221, 1234: Under Yudhishtira's rule the people were very happy, and great riches filled the treasury; then he resolved to celebrate the rājasūya; he engaged Indrasena and Viçoka and Puru, with Arjuna for his charioteer, to collect food, etc. Kṛṣṇa himself had arrived there.—§ 290 (Çiçupālav): II, 42, 1475: In the quarrel between Kṛṣṇa, etc., and Çiçupāla on the occasion of the handing over of the gift of honour (Arghāharanap), in which Çiçupāla was ultimately killed by Kṛṣṇa, Çiçupāla also spoke with depreciation about Arjuna's, etc., slaying Jarāsandha.—[§ 292a (Rājāsūyikā): II, 45a, 1607 (Dhananjaya, i.e. Arjuna, followed Yajñasena, i.e. Drupada).]—§ 293 (Dyūtap): II, 46, 1640: Terrible omens had appeared at the rājasūya, which Vyāsa explained as foreboding the destruction of the kshatriyas after thirteen years by Bhīma, A., etc.; A. prevailed upon Yudhishtira to give up his intention to die.—§ 294 (do.): II, 47 ff., 1670, 1755: Bhīma, Arjuna, etc., laughed at Duryodhana's mistakes in the palace; Çakuni caused him to invite the Pāṇḍavas to a match of dice.—§ 295 (do.): II, 52, 1890 (Kṛṣṇa is the soul of Arjuna, and vices versa).—§ 299 (do.): II, 68, (2257): At the match of dice Yudhishtira lost his kingdom, his brothers, himself, and Draupadī, etc.; Bhīma wanted to burn his hands, but was appeased by Arjuna.—§ 301 (do.): II, 70, 2363, 2376: The admonitions of Arjuna, etc., retained Bhīma from killing the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. 71, 2383, 2388, 2399, (2400): Duryodhana said that if Bhīma, Arjuna, and the twins would declare that Yudhishtira was not their master, then Draupadī would be free; A. said that he was certainly their master before the play; terrible omens appeared; Draupadī was granted a boon, and chose the liberty of Yudhishtira and his brothers. 72, (2423): Bhīma threatened to slay all his foes instantly, but was restrained by Arjuna and Yudhishtira. 73, 2447: Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Yudhishtira with his brothers and Kṛṣṇa upon their cars to Indraprastha; he said that Arjuna is patient, etc.—§ 304 (Anudyūtap): II, 77, (2543), (2545), 2546: Having been vanquished in the second match of dice, the Pāṇḍavas had to live thirteen years in the forest and a fourteenth among men without being recognized; when they were going away they threatened that Arjuna would slay Karna, etc.—§ 306 (do.): II, 80a, 2634, 2653, 2665: When going away, Arjuna had scattered sand-grains, thus alluding to the arrows he would shower in the battle; terrible omens appeared; Nārada declared that in the fourteenth year hence the Kauravas would all be destroyed by Bhīma and Arjuna.—§ 311 (Āraṇyakap): III, 4, 228: Saying that neither Bhīma nor Arjuna would spare their foes, Vidura in vain exhorted Dhṛtarāṣṭra to give back to the Pāṇḍavas all they had lost at play.—§ 313 (do.): III, 6, 275: Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who has banished Vidura, sent Saṅjaya to the Pāṇḍavas to bring

Vidura back; Saṅjaya was honoured by Bhīma and Arjuna.—§ 316 (Kirmīrav): III, 11, 411, 425: A. strung the Gāṇḍīva against Kirmīra; but Bhīma made him desist and slew him himself.—§ 317 (Arjunābhigam): III, 12, 468, (471), 537, 593: Kṛṣṇa said: "The earth shall drink the blood of Duryodhana"; Arjuna tried to pacify him by reciting the feats achieved in his former life; then Arjuna, "the soul of Kṛṣṇa," became silent, and Janārdana (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) replied that he was identical with Arjuna; Kṛṣṇa mentioned that A. won her at the svayamvara; Kṛṣṇa promised that she should be avenged; "Arjuna will slay Karna, etc."—§ 321 (Saubhavadhop): III, 22, 894: Kṛṣṇa took leave of A., etc., and set out for Dvārakā.—§ 322 (Dvāitavānapr): III, 23, 903, 917: Description of the Pāṇḍavas' going to the forest; A. told the citizens, etc., that they would carry off the good name of their enemies into their exile, and asked them to beseech the ascetics to bless them.—§ 325 (Draupadiparītāp): III, 27, 1012, 1015: Kṛṣṇa lamented their present state (she compared A. to Arjuna Kārtavīrya, etc.).—§ 327 (do.): III, 30, 1123 (discourse between Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira); 33, 1325 (Arjuna is incomparable in battle).—§ 329 (Kāmyakav): III, 36, 1441 (A. is a mighty rshi, the friend of Nārāyaṇa, ancient, eternal, a god himself).—§ 330 (Indradarçana): III, 37, 1457, 1504: Yudhishtira taught A. in private the [Pratīsmṛti] science, etc., and sent him away to Indra to obtain his weapons.—§ 331 (Kairātāp): III, 38, 1520, 1527, 1533, 1536, 1537: Arjuna on his way to Indra practised austerities for four months. 39, 1558, (1576), 1582, 1584, 1601: Combat between A. and Çiva in the guise of a Kirāta, etc.; Çiva gave him "çakshuḥ".—§ 332 (do.): III, 39: A. worshipped Çiva, (1624).—§ 333 (do.): III, 40, 1643, 1656, 1661: Çiva said to A.: "Thou wast in thy former life Nara, the friend of Nārāyaṇa; in Badari thou wast engaged in ascetic austerities for thousands of years; the Gāṇḍīva (which I got from thee by my power of illusion) is the bow with which thou assistedst Kṛṣṇa in chastising the Dānavas during the coronation of Indra." When granted a boon, Arjuna asked Çiva to give him the Pāçupata weapon named Brahmaçiras (c). Having purified himself, he was instructed in its use on the condition that he should not hurl it against any human being, for then it would destroy the universe. The earth trembled, etc.; the gods and Dānavas beheld the weapon in its embodied form by the side of Arjuna. Then Arjuna was touched by Çiva, and all that was bad in his body was dispelled. Having said to Arjuna, "Go thou into heaven," Çiva went up into the skies accompanied by Umā.—§ 334 (do.): III, 41, 1665, 1672, 1676, 1680, 1705, 1711, 1713: Then the Lokapālas, etc., came to A. on the Himavat; they granted him "vision" (dṛṣṭi) that he might see them; Yama gave him his staff as a weapon, Varuṇa his nooses, Kubera (saying that in ancient kulpas A. had ever gone through ascetic austerities along with them) gave him his favourite weapon Antardhāna (c), etc.—§ 335 (Indralok): III, 42, 1723, (1728), 1733, 1742: A. ascended with Mātali to heaven on Indra's car.—§ 336 (do.): III, 43, 1778: A. dwelt with Indra at Amarāvati.—§ 337 (do.): III, 44: A. dwelt there for five years.—§ 338 (do.): III, 45, 1812: Urvaçī becomes enamoured of A., who had studied the four Vedas with the Āngas and Upanishads and the Ākhyāna (i.e. the Purāṇa) as the fifth. 46, 1833, (1836), 1852, (1853), (1861), 1867: As Arjuna said that he regarded Urvaçī as his mother, she cursed him, saying that he would have to pass his time among females as a dancer and destitute of manhood; Indra told him that this would come to pass in the thirteenth year of their exile, then he should regain his manhood; (the desire of the man that listens to this history of A. never runs after lustful ends, etc.)—§ 339 (do.): III, 47: One day Lomaça came to the abode of Indra; as Lomaça wondered how A., who was a kshatriya, had attained the seat of Indra, Indra explained to him who Arjuna really was; A. had dwelt with Vishṇu in Badarī, which the gods and ṛṣhis were unable to behold, and whence the Gaṅgā, worshipped by Siddhas and Cāraṇas, springs forth; he and Kṛṣṇa had, at Indra's desire, been born on earth and would lighten its burden, etc. Lomaça was sent to Yudhishtira in order to bring him news about A. and accompany him on a tirthayātrā.—§ 340 (do.): III, 48, 1919, 1926: Dhṛtarāṣṭra expressed his anxiety at Arjuna's exploits to Sañjaya; 49, 1952, especially his encounter with Īva in the guise of a Kirāta, etc.—§ 341 (do.): III, 50, 1966: Arjuna's absence lasted for five years.—§ 342 (do.): III, 51, 1973, 1993: Dhṛtarāṣṭra expressed his anxiety before Sañjaya.—§ 343 (Nalop.): III, 52, 2018: One day, when the Pāṇḍavas were grieving for Arjuna, the ṛṣhi Bṛhadāçva came and told the history of Nala, who was yet more unfortunate than Yudhishtira.—§ 356 ff. (Tirthay.): III, 80, 4001: The Pāṇḍavas, etc., lamented Arjuna. 81 ff.: Pulastya's enumerations of tirthas.—§ 377 (do.): III, 86, 8289, 8295: Yudhishtira told Dhaumya that he did not like to live longer in the Kāmyaka wood without Arjuna. 87 ff.: Dhaumya described the tirthas of the various regions to Yudhishtira.—§ 378 (do.): III, 91, 8424, 8428: Lomaça arrived and told that Arjuna had obtained Brahmaçiras (b), learned the Gāndharva Veda, etc. 92, 8439: Lomaça said that Arjuna had asked him to accompany Yudhishtira to all the tirthas. 93 ff.: Accompanied by Lomaça, the Pāṇḍavas (except Arjuna), etc., visited all the tirthas.—§ 400 (do.): III, 118, 10218, 10219, 10220: At the Nāritirthas they heard of, and praised the deed of Arjuna.—§ 402 (do.): III, 120, 10282: Kṛṣṇa said that Arjuna, etc., would never renounce the rules of his caste.—§ 418 (do.): III, 139, 10838: Kṛṣṇa always sought the protection of Bhīma, whether Arjuna were near or not.—§ 420 (Gandhamādanapr.): III, 141, 10896: Yudhishtira complained to Bhīma that he had not seen Arjuna for five years; they now ought to enter Gandhamādāna (b) in company with brahmins of strict vows.—§ 424 (Bhīmakadalikhaṇḍaprav.): III, 146, 11101: Bhīma thought "as Arjuna has gone to heaven and I have come here for the sake of the flowers, what will Yudhishtira do?"—§ 436 (Yakshayuddhap.): III, 159, 11658: When they had come to the hermitage of Āraṣṭiṣheṇa, Āraṣṭiṣheṇa told the Pāṇḍavas that they must not attempt to proceed further, but wait for Arjuna there.—§ 438 (do.): III, 162: Arjuna had never uttered an untruth; in heaven he was honoured by gods, Pitṛs, and Gandharvas, and by Čāntanu, who, after having performed seven great sacrifices on the Yamunā, resided in the world of Čakra, and had enquired about his welfare.—§ 440 (do.): III, 164, 11883, 11902: Since the departure of Arjuna the Pāṇḍavas had not felt joy. After having dwelt in the abode of Indra for five years and obtained all celestial weapons from him, viz., Āgneya, Vāruṇa, Saumya, Vāyavya, Vaiṣṇava, Aindra, Paçupata, Brāhmya, Pāramesthya, likewise those of Prajāpati, Yama, Dhātṛ, Savitr, Tvastṛ, and Vaiçravaṇa, Arjuna took leave of Indra and came to Gandhamādāna.—§ 441 (Nivātakavacayuddhap.): III, 165 f., 11903: One day the Pāṇḍavas saw Arjuna descending to them with Mātali on Indra's car; A. gave Draupadī precious gems, presented to him by Indra; the next morning Indra visited them.—§ 442 (do.): III, 167, 11937, (11943): When Indra had gone, A. related his journey; against the Kirāta he had in vain employed the Vāyavya, Sthūṇākarna, Jāla, and the Čalabhāstra, and showers of shafts and stones, as the Kirāta had swallowed them all, and he had in vain discharged the Brahmāstra.—§ 443 (do.): III, 168: Arjuna continued his tale; he enumerated a great many weapons, the use of which Indra promised to teach him; Mātali wondered that Arjuna was not jerked on the car of Indra, though Indra himself got jerked at the first pull of the steeds; when he had learned the use of the weapons, Indra had said that not even the gods could now conquer him; he had received fifteen weapons and learnt five ways of using them; Indra had asked him as his fee to slay the Nivātakavacas, and had given him the car (conducted by Mātali) upon which he (Indra) had vanquished Bali, etc., and "this" diadem and ornaments of his own and the impenetrable mail, and he had fastened "this" durable (ajarāṇi) string to the Gāṇḍīva, and the gods gave him the shell Devadatta by which Indra had conquered the worlds (cf. § 446).—§ 444 (do.): III, 169 f., 12173, 12181: Arjuna related his victory over the Nivātakavacas; Indra had formerly been told by Svayambhū that he himself would destroy them in another body; as the gods were unable to slay them, Indra had presented those weapons to Arjuna in order to have them killed. Then Arjuna and Mātali again went to the abode of the gods.—§ 445 (do.): III, 173: While returning, A. destroyed Hiraṇyapura, inhabited by Paulomas and Kūlakhaṇjas, who could not be slain even by the gods, etc.; therefore Brahmān had determined that Arjuna, a mortal, should kill them; he employed the Raudra weapon. Mātali took Arjuna to the abode of Indra, and in detail related Arjuna's achievement to Indra, and Indra praised him, and said that gods, etc., would not be able to stand him in fight, etc.—§ 446 (do.): III, 174, 12281, (12289): Indra said that in the battlefield Bhīṣma, Droṇa, etc., would not be equal to one-sixteenth part of Arjuna. Then Indra gave him "this" golden garland, the shell Devadatta, etc. (see § 443). Then Indra told him to depart. A. promised that he would show Yudhishtira all the celestial weapons the next morning.—§ 447 (do.): III, 175, 12292, 12309: The next morning, when Arjuna was about to show the celestial weapons to Yudhishtira, the earth trembled, etc. Vāyu laid celestial garlands on Arjuna; sent by the gods, Nārada came and prevailed upon Arjuna not to charge the celestial weapons without necessity, which would destroy the three worlds; then the gods departed.—§ 448 (Ājagarap.): III, 176, 12317: The Pāṇḍavas spent four years with Arjuna in the gardens of Kubera.—§ 450 (do.): III, 179, 12427: Bhīma having been seized by a serpent (Nahusha), Yudhishtira directed Arjuna to protect Draupadī, while he himself with Dhaumya set out on the tracks of Bhīma.—§ 452 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.): III, 183, 12559: In the Kāmyaka wood Kṛṣṇa, "the friend of Arjuna," came accompanied by Satyabhāmā, etc.—§ 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.): III, 236, 14752, 14770: While the Pāṇḍavas were dwelling at the lake [of Dvāitavana], Dhṛtarāṣṭra was much afflicted, thinking that Arjuna would not have left heaven, where he received the celestial weapons, if it were not for the purpose of avenging himself and his brothers. 243, 14941, 14956: Duryodhana, etc.

having set out to insult the Pāṇḍavas under the pretext of supervising their cattle stations, was vanquished by the Gandharva king Citrasena; Duryodhana was made captive, and the soldiers took refuge with Yudhishtira, who prevailed upon Arjuna to rescue Duryodhana, he being himself prohibited by a sacrifice. 244: As the Gandharvas would not set free Duryodhana, etc., as requested by Arjuna, a fierce battle ensued. 245, 14984, 15001, 15002, 15003, 15004, 15005: The Gandharvas in vain attempted to break the cars of the Pāṇḍavas; especially Arjuna sent millions of them to the abode of Yama by means of his Āgneya weapon. The Gandharvas then rose up to the skies, taking the Dhārtarāshṭras with them, showering maces, darts, etc., upon Arjuna, who killed them with his weapons Sthūṇākarna (C. Sthūlā°), Indrajāla, Saura, Āgneya, and Saumya. At last Citrasena rushed at Arjuna, armed with a mace of iron; when Arjuna had cut that mace into seven pieces with his arrows, Citrasena, by means of his science, concealed himself from the view of Arjuna, and thus continued to fight with him; but Arjuna destroyed his power of concealing himself by shooting at him with his celestial arms, guided by the sound (śabdavedham samūṣṛitya). Then Citrasena showed himself to Arjuna, reminding him that he was his friend, and the battle was interrupted. 246, 15010: Citrasena relates that he had been acquainted with the purpose of Duryodhana, etc., and had been requested by Indra to bring Duryodhana thither in chains; Arjuna entreated him to set Duryodhana free, but, at the request of Citrasena, they left the matter to be decided by Yudhishtira; Yudhishtira then liberated all the Kauravas. 249, 15070: Duryodhana renounced all food from shame, as he had been liberated by Arjuna.—§ 513 (do.): III, 252, 15173, 15189: The Dānavas (Daityas) in Pātāla comforted Duryodhana, saying that Naraka, who had been reborn as Karṇa, would slay Arjuna, etc., and that the Saṃcāptakas, possessed by the Rākshasas, were desirous of slaying Arjuna, etc.—§ 514 (do.): III, 252, 15196: Karṇa promised to slay Arjuna; Duryodhana was comforted.—§ 518 (Mṛgasvapn.): III, 258: The Pāṇḍavas left Dvāitavana and repaired to the Kāmyaka forest.—§ 522 (Draupadīharanap.): III, 264: The Sindhu king Jayadratha saw Kṛṣṇā and became enamoured of her. 265: Koṭikāśya introduced him to Kṛṣṇā. 266: She said that her husbands were hunting, Arjuna to the west, etc. 267: Jayadratha was treated hospitably by Kṛṣṇā, and asked her to leave the miserable Pāṇḍavas and become his wife. 268, 15656: She threatened him with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, etc., but at last she was obliged to ascend his chariot. 269: The Pāṇḍavas overtook Jayadratha. 270, 15695: Kṛṣṇā showed Jayadratha each of the five Pāṇḍavas. 271, 15717, 15759, 15767: Arjuna killed the twelve Sauvira heroes, etc.; Jayadratha, etc., fled; Arjuna exhorted Bhīma to refrain from slaughtering the remnant of the Saundhava host; Bhīma and Arjuna went in search of Jayadratha; Arjuna killed the horses of Jayadratha, but entreated Bhīma not to kill himself.—§ 524 (Jayadrathavim.): III, 272, 15805: Jayadratha obtained from Śiva that he should be able to defeat all the five Pāṇḍavas; but Arjuna was invincible, being in reality Nara, who had formerly practised austerities in Badarī, and had acquired the thunderbolt, etc., from the Lokapālas, and was protected by Kṛṣṇa. The Pāṇḍavas continued to dwell in Kāmyaka.—§ 546 (Kupḍalāharanap.): III, 300 ff.: Lomaśa had conveyed a message from Indra to Yudhishtira: "That intense fear of thine which thou dost never express to anyone I will remove when Dhanañjaya (i.e. Arjuna) has left." After twelve years of the exile of the Pāṇḍavas had passed away, Indra obtained for Arjuna the earrings and mail of Karṇa, giving him a lance instead; 301, 16974, 16976; 302, 16984, 16989.—[§ 547 (do.): III, 309: Karṇa was always desirous of fighting with Phālguna (i.e. Arjuna), and he and Karṇa used to challenge each other.]—§ 548 (Āraṇeyap.): III, 313, 17409, 17412: When the Pāṇḍavas had left Kāmyaka and returned to Dvāitavana, and a deer carried off a brahman's araṇi and mantha, Arjuna repented that he had not slain Karṇa; Arjuna and his brothers were sent after water and dropped down dead, until Yudhishtira resuscitated them all by answering the questions of the Yaksha (i.e. Dharma).—§ 549 (Pāṇḍavapr.): IV, 1, 8, (9), (19); 2, 41, 51, (52), 60; 5, 149, 150, (154); 11, 305: Yudhishtira asked Arjuna to select some spot where they might dwell during the fourteenth year without being recognized; Arjuna mentioned some countries surrounding the kingdom of the Kurus; Yudhishtira chose the city of Virāṭa, where Arjuna presented himself as one of the neuter sex, Brhannalā by name, saying that he had been a waiting-maid of Kṛṣṇā's; Arjuna carried Kṛṣṇā; Arjuna caused them to stow away their weapons on a ṣami tree near a cemetery; they assumed secret names, Vijaya (i.e. Arjuna), etc.; Arjuna (§ 549e), "who proceeded to the Khāṇḍava forest and gratified Agni on a single car, vanquishing and slaying Nāgas and Rākshasas, and who married the sister of the Nāga king Vāsuki . . . the tenth Rudra, the thirteenth Āditya, the ninth Vasu, the tenth Graha," said: "I sing, dance, and play on instruments; I will be dancing-master to Uttara."—§ 550 (Samayapāl.): IV, 13, 332: Arjuna distributed among his brothers the proceeds of the sale of worn-out clothes which he received in the inner apartments of the palace, etc.; he pleased the king and all the ladies of the inner apartments by singing and dancing.—§ 551 (Kicakavadhap.): IV, 14-24: 19, 576; 24, 846: The senāpati Kicaka tempted Kṛṣṇā, and was slain by Bhīmasena.—§ 552 (Goharanap.): IV, 35-69: 35, 1168; 36, 1179, 1180, 1188; 37, 1198, 1206, 1213, 1229; 38, 1264, 1272; 39, 1299; 41, 1324; 43, 1344, 1354, 1362; 44, 1368, (1371), (1374), 1375, 1378, (1380), 1387; 45, (1395), 1398, 1399, 1407, 1425; 46, 1445, (1446); 47, 1492; 48, 1514, 1516; 50, 1574; 51, 1602; 53, 1630, 1640; 54, 1684; 55, 1703, 1715, 1726, 1728, (1738); 56, 1764, 1772; 57, 1785, 1787, 1790, 1811, 1819; 58, 1824, 1833, 1853, 1871, 1873, 1874, 1878, 1882, 1886; 59, 1901, 1905, 1916; 60, 1949; 61, (1963), 1966, 1989, 1992; 62, 1998, 2014; 64, 2054, 2065; 65, 2086, (2101); 66, 2120, 2122, (2140), 2142: Duryodhana, etc., invaded Virāṭa's country and plundered his cattle and wealth. The Pāṇḍavas helped Virāṭa; Uttara with Brhannalā (i.e. Arjuna) for his charioteer encountered the Kurus; Arjuna seized his own weapons, defeated the foes, and was recognized; but the appointed time had passed; the conquered cattle and wealth was recovered and the Kurus fled; when Uttara became afraid he was comforted by Arjuna: (§ 552d) "At Indra's command I formerly slew . . . the Paulomas and Kālakhañjas; aham Indrād dṛḍham muṣṭim, Brahmaṇaḥ kṛtahaṣṭatām | pragaḍhe tumulaṁ citram anividdham (B. iti viddhi) Prajāpatēḥ; on the other side of the Ocean I vanquished 60,000 of car-warriors residing in Hiranyapura . . . I have obtained the Raudra from Rudra, the Vāruṇa from Varuṇa, the Āgneya from Agni, the Vāyavya astra from Mātariṣvan, the thunderbolt (vajra) and other weapons from Çakra."—§ 552 (ß) (44, v. 1375 f.): Enumeration of A.'s ten names.—§ 552 (γ) (45, v. 1429 ff.): Combat with the Gandharvas on the occasion of the Ghosha-yātrā; conflict at Khāṇḍava against D. and Dā.; combat on behalf of Indra against the Nivātakavacas and Paulomas; svayamvara of Kṛṣṇā.—§ 552 (δ) (45, v. 1433 f.): Droṇa, Çakra, Vaiçravaṇa, Yama, Varuṇa, Agni, Kṛpa, Kṛṣṇa (Mādhava), Pinākapāṇin (Çiva) [have been my preceptors].—§ 552 (ε) (49, v. 1535 ff.): Alone he saved the Kurus (from the Gandharvas), satiated Agni, led the life of a brahmachārī for five years; taking up Subhadra on his car, he alone challenged Kṛṣṇa to single combat; he fought with Rudra as a forester; rescued Kṛṣṇā (from Jayadratha); for five years studied the use of arms under Indra; vanquished all foes; vanquished the Gandharva king Citrasena; vanquished the Nivātakavacas and Kālakhaṇjas.—Arjuna caused Uttara to bring away the white garments of Droṇa and Kṛpa and the yellow ones of Karṇa and the blue ones of Duryodhana and Açvatthaman, but not those of Bhīṣma, because he was not stupefied; these garments he presented to Uttara.—§ 553 (Vaiivāhikap.): IV, 70, 2267, 2289; 71, (2291), 2297, 2299, 2303, 2306, 2324; 72, (2327), 2346: After the victory over the Kurus, Arjuna praised Yudhishtira before Virāṭa, and showed him all the Pāṇḍavas; Uttara spoke about Arjuna's prowess, and described each of the Pāṇḍavas, especially Arjuna ("it was by him that Bhīṣma, Droṇa, and Duryodhana were vanquished"). Virāṭa offered to bestow his daughter Uttara upon Arjuna, who accepted her for Abhimanyu. The nuptial festival was held at Upaplavya, where a great many kings came with akshauhīṇis of troops.—§ 554 (Sainyodyogap.): V, 1, 5; 7, 140, (167): After the nuptials the assembled kings took counsel of each other about the preparations of war; after Kṛṣṇa had set out for Dvārakā, Arjuna and Duryodhana came thither while Kṛṣṇa was asleep; Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa himself, who was not to fight, and Kṛṣṇa promised to become Arjuna's charioteer; Arjuna came back to Yudhishtira with Kṛṣṇa and the foremost Daçārhas.—§ 555 (do.): V, 8, 199, 214, 215; 18, 561, 567: Çalya came with an army to the Pāṇḍavas, but was enlisted in the cause of Duryodhana; he, however, promised Yudhishtira to dispirit Karṇa as his charioteer, and related the misery endured by Indra and his queen.—§ 556 (Saṁjaya-yānap.): V, 20-32: 22, 658, 668, 706, 711; 26, 758, 759; 27, 785; 29, 861; 30, 868: Drupadu's purohita was sent as a messenger to Dhṛtarāṣṭra; he said, "Nobody can fight Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa"; Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Drupadu's purohita back to the Pāṇḍavas. Praising Arjuna, etc. (22a, etc.), Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent Saṁjaya to Upaplavya, where he saluted Dhanañjaya (23γ); Yudhishtira said that by a single effort of his hand (23c) A. could shoot sixty-one whetted and keen-edged shafts, furnished with excellent feathers, etc.; Yudhishtira demanded Indraprastha, compared Arjuna, etc., with Duryodhana, etc.; the Pāṇḍavas might be compared with a tree of righteousness, whose trunk was Arjuna, etc.; Saṁjaya then bade farewell to A., etc. (30ν); Yudhishtira declared Saṁjaya to be as dear to him as Dhanañjaya (i.e. Arjuna); Saṁjaya, having returned to Hāstinapura, spoke to Dhṛtarāṣṭra about Arjuna's ascending to the very heavens, etc.—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 47-71: 48, 1810, 1815, 1816, 1831; 49, 1933, 1940, 1963; 51, 2031, 2037, 2084; 52, 2092; 53, 2109, 2111; 54, 2131, 2135; 55, 2182, 2184, 2195, 2202; 56, 2215, 2219; 57, 2246, 2247, 2292; 59, 2329, 2352, 2358; 6C, 2366, 2378; 65, 2497; 66, 2499;

67, 2522; 68, 2523; 69, 2545: The next morning Saṁjaya in the council hall related that Arjuna (! cf. § 556, V, 23-28) had said with Yudhishtira's sanction that Saṁjaya should threaten Duryodhana, etc., saying that the Pāṇḍavas only wished for war; Arjuna said (§ 561b, V, 48) that one morning when he had finished his water rites and prayers, a brahman said to him that he would have to fight with his foes, and that either Indra riding on his steed would walk before him, or Kṛṣṇa would protect him from behind riding on his car drawn by Sugriva; and Arjuna had preferred Vāsudeva (Kṛṣṇa) as his ally to Indra. Arjuna also said that Duryodhana thought of imprisoning Kṛṣṇa and seeks to create a sudden disunion between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, and relates terrific omens; "I will hurl the Sthūpā-karṇa, Pācupata, and Brāhma weapons, and all those that Çakra gave me." Bhīṣma said that Nara and Nārāyaṇa are Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; Arjuna with an arrow severed in battle the head of the Asura Jambha, etc., and Bhīṣma rebuked Karṇa, who had seen his brother in the city of Virāṭa slain by Arjuna; Saṁjaya mentioned Arjuna's burning of the Khāṇḍava forest. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was most afraid of Bhīma (who in height is higher than Arjuna by the span of the thumb); yet he was also afraid of Arjuna; "33 years have passed away since the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest; we have never heard of his being defeated anywhere"; Duryodhana alluded to the resolution of the Saṁçaptakas to slay Arjuna.—§ 561h (Yānas.): V, 56: Bhaumana (i.e. Viçvakarman, Nil.) and Çakra had always created wonderful forms, [he who is] Tvaṣṭṛ, [and] Dhātṛ (i.e. Prajāpati, Nil.); for on this (i.e. Arjuna's) flagstaff they (i.e. Tvaṣṭṛ, Çakra, and Dhātṛ, Nil.) have made forms by divine illusion (devamāyayā); and at Bhīmasena's request Hanumat will also place his own image on it. The banner in all directions both perpendicularly and laterally covered one yojana, and even if trees stood in its way its course could not be impeded; it was ever varying like Çakra's bow (i.e. the rainbow). And to that chariot were yoked 100 white celestial steeds with the speed of the winds, given by Citraratha; neither on earth, nor in the sky, nor in heaven, their course could be impeded; a boon had been granted that their number would always remain full, however often they might be slain.—Arjuna had got Karṇa, Jayadratha, etc., assigned as his share in the combat. Arjuna was protected by the celestials; Saṁjaya had seen two straight lines on his foot soles; Agni would help him as in Khāṇḍava; he took up 500 arrows at a time, and Kṛṣṇa protected him; on a single chariot Arjuna conquered the whole earth, etc.; he had said that Bhīṣma, etc., were all on the eve of death, if they did not give up to Yudhishtira his own share of the kingdom.—§ 562 (Bhagavad-yānap.): V, 72-95: 74, 2739; 77, 2799; 78, (2802); 79, 2838; 81, 2865; 82, 2907, 2916; 83, 2949; 90, 3156, 3209, 3210: A. and Yudhishtira were averse from war, and A. told Kṛṣṇa to exert himself sincerely to bring about peace; if, however, Duryodhana would not give them what they demanded, he would annihilate the Kṣatriya race. During Kṛṣṇa's embassy Kuntī compared A. to Arjuna Kārtavīrya, and mentioned the invisible voices in the night of Arjuna's birth.—§ 563 (Dambhodbhavop.): V, 96, 3494, 3496 (identified with Nara).—§ 567 (Bhagavad-yānap.): V, 124-132: 124, 4172, 4173, 4178, 4180; 125, 4199, 4201; 126, 4229; 131, 4425: Kṛṣṇa mentioned Arjuna's exploits before Duryodhana, and said that Bhīṣma, etc., could not contend with Bhīma and A.—§ 569 (do.): V, 137, 4644, 4663; 138, 4680; 140, 4747; 144, 4887; 145, 4924,

4925, 4926; 146, 4949, 4950, 4951: Kuntī asked Kṛṣṇa to remind A. of the voice heard at his birth, and tell him always to tread in the path pointed out by Draupadī; that Bhīma and Arjuna, like two Yamas, were capable of slaying the very gods, etc. Bhīshma and Droṇa reminded Duryodhana of the exploits of A.; Droṇa said that his affection for A. was greater than for Aśvatthāman. Duryodhana had chosen Karna as the antagonist of Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa described Arjuna's banner, made by Bhaumana by means of celestial illusion; his Aindra, Āgneya, and Māruta weapons, etc. Karna promised Kuntī, that except Arjuna, her other sons should not be slain by him.—§ 570 (Sainyaniryānap.): V, 151-159: 153, 5197; 154, 5232; 157, 5318, 5328: At the commencement of the battle Anādhṛṣṭi, etc. (ζ), marched surrounding Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, all of them blowing their conchs on entering Kurukshetra. As Yudhishtira complained that he had to slay his preceptors, etc., A. reminded him of what Kuntī and Vidura had said through Kṛṣṇa. Bhīshma said that he did not know of any warrior upon earth who was equal to him, except Arjuna; but Arjuna would never openly fight with him. Karna wanted to fight with Arjuna, but not before Bhīshma was slain. Arjuna "of curly hair" was made the leader of all the leaders of the Pāṇḍava army, and Kṛṣṇa the leader of Arjuna and the driver of his steeds. Bhīshma's son Rukmin offered Arjuna his assistance if he was afraid; A., mentioning his exploits, and that he had paid his homage to Rudra, etc. (ν), for battle's sake, would not say he was afraid.—§ 571 (Ulūkādūt.): V, 160-164: 160, 5460, 5513; 161, 5558; 162, 5578, 5586, 5640; 163, 5651, 5695, 5697; 164, 5704, 5706: Ulūka had to state before A. that among the Kuru troops were the Kāmbhojas, etc. (γ); "I know that thy Gāṇḍīva is full 6 cubits long"; Ulūka repeated the statement to the Pāṇḍavas, etc., and once more repeated his words to A.; A. said that Duryodhana's contrivance of seeking cover behind Bhīshma would be of no avail, as he would himself slay Bhīshma.—§ 572 (Bhātātīrathas.): V, 165-172: 172, 5935.—§ 573 (Ambop.): V, 173-196: 185, 7308; 193, 7560; 194, 7587: "A. had been ordained by Śrayambhū to slay Bhīshma." Karna having said that he could annihilate Bhīma and Arjuna in the course of five nights, Bhīshma ridiculed him, saying that he would think otherwise when he had encountered Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; to Yudhishtira Arjuna said that with Kṛṣṇa as his ally he might exterminate the three worlds with the gods, etc., in the twinkling of an eye, etc. In the array of Yudhishtira, Bhīma and Arjuna were in the second division, then, with Kṛṣṇa, in the middle division together with Virāṭa, etc.—§ 576 (Bhagavadg.): VI, 13-42: 19, 713, (714), 723; 20, 754, 759; 21, 761, 765; 22, 785; 23, 793, 795, (796), 813; 25, 833, 878; 26, 880, 923, (932); 27, (951), 957, (986); 28, (997), 998, 1002, 1030; 29, 1036; 30, 1080, 1096, (1097), (1101), 1110; 31, 1127, 1137; 32, (1142), 1157, 1168; 34, (1216), 1236, 1243, 1246; 35, (1247), 1293, 1296, (1297), 1300; 36, (1302); 37, (1322); 38, (1375); 41, (1427); 42, (1455), 1463, 1515, (1527), 1530: Yudhishtira told Arjuna to array the troops in a needle-mouthed (guṇimukha) array in conformity with the words of M.-r. Brhaspati. Arjuna said that he would make a vajra-array, which was designed by Indra. Çikhaṇḍin was protected by A. Yudhishtira sorrowfully addressed Arjuna, who consoled him, mentioning his truthfulness, righteousness, etc. At Kṛṣṇa's instance Arjuna recited a hymn to Dūrgā, who appeared and gave him assurance of victory. Arjuna asked Kṛṣṇa to place his chariot between the two armies, so that he might see who had assembled to fight. Beholding his relatives, etc., Arjuna was filled with compassion and overcome with despondency, and refused to fight. Kṛṣṇa appeals to Arjuna to shake off his despondency, but in vain. Kṛṣṇa then explained to Arjuna the nature and the attributes of the soul, and the folly of grieving for the dead, and exhorted him to fulfil the duties of his caste by fighting like a man, and to concern himself with work for work's sake and not for the sake of its results, etc. (Bhagavadgītā) Arjuna praised Kṛṣṇa; his delusion was destroyed, and he once more seized the Gāṇḍīva.—§ 577 (Bhīshmar.): VI, 43, (1543), 1560: Beholding A. again seizing the Gāṇḍīva, the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas were filled with joy.—§ 578 (do.), VI, 44-51: THE FIRST DAY'S ENCOUNTER: 45, 1678; 49, 1994, 1998, 2017; 50, 2072: Bhīshma attacked Arjuna; Abhimanyu was regarded equal to Arjuna; placing himself in front of Çaṅkha, A. attacked Bhīshma; Çaṅkha mounted Arjuna's chariot; Bhīshma abandoned Arjuna, and attacked Drupada. The Pāṇḍavas were routed, the sun set, and the Pāṇḍavas withdrew their forces. Arjuna was indifferent; Kṛṣṇa consoled Yudhishtira, who recommended the array called Krauñcārūpa. When morning dawned, Dhṛṣṭadyumna placed Arjuna in the van of the army; (§ 578e, VI, 50) A.'s standard was created at Indra's command by the celestial artificer. A. blows the Devadatta.—§ 579 (do.), VI, 52-55: SECOND DAY: 52, 2128, 2132, 2142, 2144, 2163, 2167, 2168, 2172, 2189; 55, 2383, 2391, 2393: Bhīshma shot on A., etc. (a); A. told Kṛṣṇa to drive his chariot before Bhīshma; only Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Karna were able to encounter Arjuna; encounter between Bhīshma and A., who was surrounded by Sātyaki, etc.; the Kurus were routed; A. and Kṛṣṇa blew their conchs.—§ 580 (do.), VI, 56-59: THIRD DAY: 58, 2487; 59, 2563, 2586, 2588, 2621, 2639, 2646: Arjuna and Dhṛṣṭadyumna formed an array in the shape of the half-moon, with Arjuna on the left wing; Arjuna fought with the Kauravas, who could not be defeated, as they were protected by Droṇa; and the Pāṇḍavas could not be defeated as they were protected by Arjuna and Bhīma; at last Bhīshma, etc. (c), broke the ranks of the Pāṇḍavas. D., Dā., G., Pç., U., and Rā. eulogized Arjuna. Arjuna routed the Kaurava army, and their flight could not be checked by Bhīshma and Droṇa, but was checked by Duryodhana. Kṛṣṇa told Arjuna to fight Bhīshma; he and Arjuna were both wounded by Bhīshma, and the Pāṇḍava army was routed; Bhīshma ordered Droṇa, etc. (u), to attack Arjuna; the grandson of Çini (i.e. Sātyaki=Yuyudhānu) came to Arjuna's assistance. Kṛṣṇa jumped down from the chariot with his discus Sudarçana in his hand, and rushed towards Bhīshma, but was held back by Arjuna; then Duryodhana, etc. (ν), attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Māhendra weapon and checked the Kaurava host; A. then produced a river of blood, with Rākshasas on its banks. At sunset the Kurus (Bhīshma, etc.) withdrew their forces; Arjuna did the same. There was a great uproar among the Kurus: "the Sauvīras (π) have all been slain by Arjuna, and he has vanquished Çrutāyus, etc. (ρ)."—§ 581 (do.), VI, 60-68: FOURTH DAY: 60, 2656, 2673; 61, 2697: Bhīshma, Droṇa, etc., attacked Arjuna. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa as incarnations of the old ṛṣhis Nara and Nārāyaṇa.—§ 582 (do.), VI, 69-74: FIFTH DAY: Bhīshma proceeded in a Makara-array, the Pāṇḍavas in a Çyena-array; Arjuna attacked Bhīshma; Duryodhana protected Bhīshma, who was attacked by the Pāṇḍavas headed by Arjuna. (§ 582b, VI, 71): A.'s standard bore the device of a lion's tail and looked like a blazing mountain in the welkin . . . of celestial workmanship . . . with various hues; looking like a rising comet it could not be obstructed by trees. The Kurus were afraid and seemed to melt away. Arjuna encountered Droṇa (ζ). Duryodhana urged 25,000 to slay Arjuna, who, however, slew them all. The Matsyas and Kekayas surrounded Arjuna and Abhimanyu. At sunset both parties withdrew their troops.—§ 583 (do.), VI, 75-80: SIXTH DAY: 75, 3303, 3310: The next day the Pāṇḍavas were arranged in the Makara-array, headed by Drupada and Arjuna. The Pāṇḍava army was protected by A.; the Kauravas fled, mangled by Bhīma and Arjuna.—§ 584 (do.), VI, 81-86: SEVENTH DAY: 81, 3572; 82, 3584; 84, 3743, 3748; 85, 3760; 86, 3828, 3834: The next day Yudhisṭhira disposed his troops in a vajra-array; many kings attacked Arjuna, among others the Trigarta king with his brothers; Arjuna invoked the Aindra weapon; the foes fled and were rescued by Bhīshma. When the Kuru army had been routed by Arjuna, and Bhīshma had proceeded against the chariot of Arjuna, Duryodhana exhorted the kings to protect Bhīshma. Fighting with Alambusha, Sātyaki employed the Aindra weapon which he had obtained from Arjuna, and destroyed the productions of Alambusha's illusive force. Arjuna caused Kṛṣṇa to drive the chariot towards Bhīshma; A. fought with Suçarman, and slew many. The Trigarta king and thirty-two others attacked Arjuna, who slew sixty of them and then hastened to slay Bhīshma. The Trigarta king attacking Arjuna, Çikhaṇḍin, etc., came to his aid. Arjuna shot at them with the Gāṇḍīva. Duryodhana and Jayadratha, etc., came in order to protect Bhīshma against Arjuna; A. fought against many foes. At sunset Arjuna (having vanquished Suçarman, etc.), etc., proceeded to their tents.—§ 585 (do.), VI, 87-98: EIGHTH DAY: 89, 3949, 3965; 90, 3977, 3979, 3981, 3983, 3986, 4022, 4040, 4048, 4052; 95, 4243, 4322; 96, 4358; 98, 4476, 4495: Dhṛṣṭadyumna formed a Çṛṅgāṭaka-array: Bhīmasena and Sātyaki, etc., in the wings, next to them Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, etc. A., etc. (ξ), rushed against all the kings under the command of Duryodhana with horses of the Kāmboja, etc. (ρ), breed. Arjuna's son Irāvata (δ) attacked the Kauravas, but was slain by the Rākshasa, Rshyaçṛṅga's son [Alambusha]. Arjuna, etc., slew many; he complained of Irāvata's death before Kṛṣṇa; he fought Bhīshma, etc. (η). When dark night set in, both parties withdrew their armies. "Yudhāmanyu protects Arjuna's left wheel, Uttamaujas his right wheel, and Arjuna protects Çikhaṇḍin"; A. told Dhṛṣṭadyumna to place Çikhaṇḍin before Bhīshma; he would himself be his protector.—§ 586 (do.), VI, 99-107: NINTH DAY: 101, 4589, 4597, 4622, 4642; 102, 4650, 4655; 104, 4729; 106, 4848, 4871; 107, 4912, 4924, 4968, 4976, (4989): A. fought Bhīshma, Kṛṣṇa, and Droṇa; then the Trigarta king and his son; A. employed the Vāyavya weapon; the Trigarta division turned their backs; Duryodhana, etc. (ι), surrounded A. A. slew all the followers of Suçarman; fought Duryodhana. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to slay Bhīshma; Kṛṣṇa left the chariot and rushed at Bhīshma, whip in hand, but was brought back by Arjuna. When the sun set, both parties withdrew their forces. Kṛṣṇa said that Arjuna, etc. (χ), were invincible; they went to Bhīshma himself in order to ask him about the means of killing him; Bhīshma advised A. to fight with him, placing Çikhaṇḍin before him; A. grieved at the prospect of killing Bhīshma, but was reminded by Kṛṣṇa of his vow to slay Bhīshma. The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa went away with rejoicing hearts.—§ 587 (do.), VI, 108-120: TENTH DAY: 108, 5011; 110, 5094, 5114, 5115, 5125, 5139; 111, 5195; 112, 5213, 5218; 113, 5284, 5287, 5289, 5290; 114, 5298, 5308, 5324; 115, 5340, 5341; 116, 5428, 5429, 5430, 5433, 5434, 5435; 117, 5455, 5459, 5465, 5470, 5472; 119, 5627, 5632, 5642: The Pāṇḍavas went out for battle, placing Çikhaṇḍin in their van; Bhīmasena and Arjuna became the protectors of his wheels, etc.; headed by Arjuna, they proceeded against Bhīshma; Arjuna urged Çikhaṇḍin to slay Bhīshma, while he himself would check Droṇa, etc. (δ); A. defeated the Kuru army; Duryodhana complained of A. before Bhīshma, etc. Urged by A., Çikhaṇḍin, etc., attacked Bhīshma; Duḥçāsana attacked Arjuna and Çikhaṇḍin; A. could not advance further than to the chariot of Duḥçāsana; A. compelled Duḥçāsana to turn back, and then crushed the Kuru troops; Duḥçāsana again resisted him; Arjuna and Çikhaṇḍin approached Bhīma (for aid); Duryodhana urged the Trigarta king Suçarman to slay Arjuna and Bhīmasena; A. fought Çalya, etc. (κ); Droṇa, etc., fought Arjuna and Bhīmasena; so did Bhīshma; Droṇa, etc. (ξ), fought the Pārthas, especially Arjuna, etc. (ο); the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra fought with Çikhaṇḍin and A.; A. fought with Bhīshma and Bhagadatta, and urged Çikhaṇḍin to slay Bhīshma; the Kurus attacked Arjuna; no chariot-warrior ventured to approach Bhīshma except Arjuna and Çikhaṇḍin; Bhīshma did not defend himself against Çikhaṇḍin, whom Arjuna urged quickly to slay Bhīshma; Duḥçāsana fought with Arjuna and all the Pārthas, but was vanquished by A.; the Videhas, etc. (ρ), attacked Arjuna, who defeated them all by means of celestial weapons; then A. fought with Duḥçāsana, etc., Bhīshma, etc.; Kṛṣṇa urged A. to slay Bhīshma; the Pāṇḍava king Dhṛṣṭaketu, etc. (υ), were afflicted by Bhīshma and rescued by Arjuna; protected by Arjuna, Çikhaṇḍin rushed against Bhīshma; A. slew all Bhīshma's followers, and then rushed at him himself; Droṇa, etc. (employing celestial weapons), fought with A.; Bhīshma said to Duḥçāsana that A. was invincible, and that he himself was not able to be vanquished by D., Dā., and Rā.; Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons surrounded Bhīshma, but fled before Arjuna. Bhīshma fell down from his chariot a little before sunset, but put off his death, as the sun was in the southern solstice; both parties desisted from battle; as Bhīshma's head hung down he asked for a pillow; Arjuna supported his head with three arrows shot from the Gāṇḍīva and consecrated by means of mantras, at which Bhīma was highly gratified.—§ 588 (do.), VI, 121-122: ELEVENTH DAY: 121, 5776, 5780, 5781: The next morning, as Bhīshma asked for water, Arjuna mounted his chariot and from the Gāṇḍīva shot an arrow consecrated with mantras and identified with the Pārjanya weapon, therewith piercing the earth, and there arose a jet of pure and cold water; Bhīshma praised Arjuna: "even Nārada spoke of thee as an ancient ṛshi . . ."; he said to Duryodhana that the weapons appertaining to Agni, etc., were known only to Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Bhīshma tried to win over Karna to the side of his uterine brothers, but he said that he would fight Arjuna, etc., though protected by Kṛṣṇa.—§ 589 (Dronābhish.), VII, 1-11: 2, 67, 82; 3, 110; 6, 164; 7, 197; 8, 226; 10, 327; 11, 419, 422: Karna waited upon Bhīshma, mentioning the danger menacing the Kurus from Arjuna with the Gāṇḍīva, etc., Arjuna's battle with Çiva, etc. Yudhisṭhira disposed his troops in the form of a krauñca (crane), with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna at the head. The Pāṇḍavas and Śrījayas were defeated by Droṇa; Yudhiṣṭhira asked A. to check Droṇa. Dhṛtarāṣṭra regretted that Duryodhana did not know Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.—§ 590 (do.), VII, 12-16: ELEVENTH DAY (Sañjaya begins his narrative in detail): 12, 453; 13, (472): Droṇa promised to seize Yudhiṣṭhira, if he was not protected by Arjuna (with his weapons received from Indra and Rudra, etc.); Arjuna must therefore be withdrawn from Yudhiṣṭhira. Yudhiṣṭhira learnt through his spies that Droṇa had promised to seize him; A. consoled him. A fierce battle commenced; protected by Droṇa and Arjuna, both hosts seemed to stand inactive. In order to rescue Yudhiṣṭhira, A. attacked Droṇa's division. When the sun set, both parties withdrew their troops. The Pāṇḍavas, etc., praised Arjuna.—§ 591 (Samcāptakavadhap.), VII, 17, 680, 688, 709: Droṇa confessed his inability of seizing Yudhiṣṭhira if Arjuna were by; the Trigarta king, saying that Arjuna had always injured them, said that they would take an oath that either Arjuna or the Trigartas should be slain. Then they summoned Arjuna to the southern part of the field. Arjuna told Satyajit to guard Yudhiṣṭhira, and went out against the Trigartas.—§ 592 (do.), VII, 18-32: TWELFTH DAY: 18, 728, 733, 734, 736, 737; 19, 753, 756, 763, 764, 765, 770, 773; 23, 1017; 26, 1130; 27, 1208, 1212, 1219; 28, 1232, 1234, 1235, 1241; 29, 1265, 1266, 1274; 30, 1303, 1306, 1312, 1319, 1321, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1328, 1329, 1336, 1339; 32, 1418, 1423, 1426, 1428, 1443: The Samcāptakas rejoiced at the prospect of fighting with A., who terrified them with the sound of Devadatta, and attacked them; Subāhu and Suçarman, etc. (a), fought with A.; they fled to Duryodhana, but, urged by the Trigarta king, they once more returned to the field with the Nārāyaṇa cowherds. Kṛṣṇa conveyed Arjuna to the Samcāptakas. The Nārāyaṇas fought with Arjuna. A. blew the Devadatta and employed the Tvāṣṭra weapon, that confounded the foes, who began to strike each other; Arjuna crossed the Lalithas, etc. (β), and used the Vāyavya weapon to frustrate the downpour of arrows shot by his foes, and Vāyu bore away crowds of Samcāptakas with their steeds, etc. Yudhiṣṭhira disposed his troops in the form of a semicircle. Yudhiṣṭhira fled. Arjuna's son Çrutakīrti fought with the son of Duḥçāsana. A., etc. (v), fought with Bhagadatta (upon his elephant). Urged by Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa began to proceed against Bhagadatta; the Samcāptakas (14,000, including 10,000 Gopālāḥ or Nārāyaṇāḥ) challenged Arjuna, and he encountered them, discharged the Brāhma weapon, defeated and slew them, and then turned against Bhagadatta; but as Suçarman with his brothers followed him from behind, he again attacked Suçarman, and then again Bhagadatta; Bhagadatta, at last, consecrated his hook with mantras so as to become the Vaiṣṇava weapon; Kṛṣṇa received it on his breast, and it became a garland. As A. taxed Kṛṣṇa for fighting himself, Kṛṣṇa related the history of the Vaiṣṇavāstra (c); "the great Asura has now been divested of that supreme weapon; now slay Bhagadatta, that enemy of the gods, just as I formerly slew the Asura Naraka for the good of the worlds"; A. then slew both Bhagadatta and the elephant. Then A. slew the two brothers Vṛṣa and Acala. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons attacked Arjuna, and Çakuni employed magics in order to confound him and Kṛṣṇa: producing clubs, etc., and asses, etc., which A. slew with celestial weapons; then darkness, whence harsh voices were heard; this A. dispelled with the weapon Jyotishka; then waves of water, which were dried up with the Āditya weapon; Çakuni fled. A. slaughtered the Kuru army: some followed Droṇa, others Duryodhana; a fierce battle took place on the southern side between Arjuna and the Kurus. The Pāṇḍavas regretted that Arjuna was engaged on the southern part of the field in slaughtering the Samcāptakas and the Nārāyaṇa force. Having slain the Samcāptakas, Arjuna fought with Droṇa, etc., employing the Āgneya weapon; A. slew three of Karna's brothers (γγ). At sunset the armies retired.—§ 593 (Abhimanyuvadhāp.), VII, 33-51: THIRTEENTH DAY: 33, 1456, 1466, 1468; 35, 1520, 1521; 36, 1545; 40, 1661; 45, 1824; 51, 1989, 1991: Being overcome by A., and Droṇa having failed to seize Yudhiṣṭhira, the Kurus were regarded as defeated; they heard everybody praise A. and Kṛṣṇa. Next morning Duryodhana blamed Droṇa for not having seized Yudhiṣṭhira; Droṇa said that nobody could defeat the force protected by Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, save Mahādeva. The Samcāptakas challenged Arjuna and took him away to the southern side of the field. The Pāṇḍavas were headed by Bhīmaśema. Abhimanyu defeated all the warriors that encountered him with the weapons he had received from Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. At last Abhimanyu was slain by Duḥçāsana's son, after Jayadratha had checked those who tried to follow Abhimanyu.—§ 595 (do.), VII, 71, 2465: Vyāsa consoled Yudhiṣṭhira, who became free from grief; but "what shall we say to Arjuna?" —§ 596 (Pratijñāp.), VII, 72-81: 72, 2485, 2537, 2562, 2563; 73, 2581, 2610; 74, 2636, 2637; 75, 2666, 2667, 2672; 76, (2679), 2704; 77, 2716; 78, 2774; 79, 2775, 2787, 2790, 2791, 2795, 2799, 2801, 2803, 2808; 80, 2842, 2868, 2872, (2874), 2885; 81, 2889, 2895, 2905, 2909: In the evening Arjuna, after having slain large numbers of Samcāptakas, proceeded towards his tent and told Kṛṣṇa that his heart was afflicted; he saw indications of disaster; Abhimanyu did not come out with smiles to receive him, etc. He remembered that Droṇa had this day formed the circular array, which none save Abhimanyu could break; but he had not taught him how to come out of it after having pierced it; he had heard the leonine shouts of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras, and Kṛṣṇa had heard Yuyutsu censuring them for having slain a child instead of Arjuna, and then Yuyutsu had cast up his weapons afflicted with rage and grief. Kṛṣṇa consoled Arjuna, talking about the kṣatriya duties and heaven. None save Kṛṣṇa and Yudhiṣṭhira (who were always acceptable to him) could address Arjuna. Yudhiṣṭhira addressed him and told (VII, 72) him the particulars of Abhimanyu's heroism and fall. Arjuna vowed to slay Jayadratha before the sun set the following day (his oath); even as to As., D., men, birds, snakes, P., wanderers of the night, B.-r., and D.-r., etc., he said that they would not succeed in protecting him, even if he entered Rasātala, or ascended the firmament, or repaired to the city of the gods (Devapuram) or the city of Diti (Ditih puram); if the sun set before he had slain him, he would himself enter the fire. Arjuna bent the Gāṇḍīva, Kṛṣṇa blew the Pāñcajanya, Arjuna the Devadatta (VII, 73). Having been informed by spies, Jayadratha was overwhelmed with sorrow and fear, thinking that not even Droṇa (a), not even D., G., As., U., Rā., could protect him against Arjuna. He wished to return home. Duryodhana comforted him saying that he, Karna, etc. (β), would protect him. Accompanied by Duryodhana, Jayadratha that very night repaired to Droṇa and questioned him about the difference between himself and Arjuna. Droṇa said they had got the same instruction, but Arjuna was superior to Jayadratha in consequence of yoga and the hard life he had led; Droṇa would, however, protect him, forming an impenetrable array; and, moreover, death ought not to be an object of terror to him (VII, 74). Kṛṣṇa remonstrated with A. for his rash vow; the Kurus had expected an attack by A.; now they would protect Jayadratha (who had mentioned A.'s encounter with Çiva, Hiranyapura, etc.); Karna, etc. (γ), would be in Jayadratha's van; Droṇa's array would be half a çakaṭa and half a lotus with a needle-mouthed array in the middle (VII, 75). A. assured Kṛṣṇa of his competence to accomplish his vow, notwithstanding Droṇa, Sā., R., V., A., M., with Indra, V.-D., D., P., G., Garuḍa, etc., by means of the Gāṇḍīva and the weapons he had obtained from Yama, etc. (δ) (VII, 76). The gods, including Indra, became very anxious. Sinister omens appeared in nature. Kṛṣṇa went to A.'s abode and consoled Subhadra (mentioning the kṣatriya duties, etc., and revenge) (VII, 77). Subhadra bewailed Abhimanyu, and said "Shame on Bhīmasena, etc. (ε)," because they had not protected him. Draupadī and Uttara came to her, lamenting. Kṛṣṇa said that Abhimanyu had attained the most laudable and enviable goal. Then he returned to A. (VII, 78). A. performed his usual nightly sacrifice to Çiva. Kṛṣṇa with Dāraka repaired to his own tent. None in the Pāṇḍava camp slept that night, thinking of A. In the middle of the night Kṛṣṇa said to Dāraka that he had resolved to fight the next day [if necessary]; he must equip his chariot, placing Kaumodakī, etc., on it, making room for Garuḍa, and yoking Balāhaka, etc. (ζ), to it; when hearing Pāṇḍava emitting the shrill Rśhabha note, he should come to Kṛṣṇa (VII, 79). A. saw Kṛṣṇa in a dream, who told him not to grieve, and mentioned the Pācupata weapon (with which Çiva slew all the Daityas in battle); if he remembered it now, he would be able to slay Jayadratha next day; otherwise he must pray to Çiva. At the Brāhma hour A. saw himself sojourning through the sky (Himavat, Maṇimat, frequented by Si. and Cā., etc. (η)), with Kṛṣṇa, to where Çiva was seated with Pārvatī (description) (θ); Kṛṣṇa and A. praised Mahādeva (VII, 80). A. beheld the offerings that Çiva made every night to Kṛṣṇa, and he mentally adored both Kṛṣṇa and Çiva. Çiva told them to bring Çiva's bow and arrow from a lake of amṛta. In the lake they saw two terrible snakes; when they had uttered the Brahma Çatarudriya, the snakes assumed the forms of a bow and arrow; from Çiva's body there came out a brahmācārīn with blue throat and red locks, and having showed A. the use of the bow and arrow and the mantras, he sped these weapons to that same lake. Having thus once more obtained the Pācupata weapon, A. and Kṛṣṇa came back to their own camp (VII, 81).—§ 597 (do.), VII, 82-84: FOURTEENTH DAY: 83, 2958, 2969, 2970; 84, 2975, 2977, 2982, 2983, 2995, 2998: Yudhishtira underwent his morning rites (very copious description); Kṛṣṇa visited Yudhishtira (VII, 82). Then also Virāṭa, etc. (α), arrived. Yudhishtira asked Kṛṣṇa to rescue the Pāṇḍavas, quoting Nārada. Kṛṣṇa assured Yudhishtira of Arjuna's success (VII, 83). A. came and acquainted Yudhishtira with his dream, then he and Kṛṣṇa and Yuyudhāna (these two on one chariot) set out for A.'s pavilion. Kṛṣṇa equipped A.'s chariot (which had previously been sanctified with mantras), which A. circumambulated with his bow and arrow in hand. A., Yuyudhāna, and Kṛṣṇa mounted the chariot. Many and auspicious omens appeared. A. charged Yuyudhāna to protect Yudhishtira in his absence (only he or Pradyumna was able to do it). Yuyudhāna proceeded to Yudhishtira (VII, 84).—§ 598 (Jayadrthavadhap.), VII, 85-88: 85, 3047, 3053, 3056; 86, 3082; 87, 3095:

The warriors of Droṇa shouted in anger "where is A.?" etc. (η). After the Rudra-hour had set in, A. made his appearance, while omens appeared in nature. Durmarshana (Dhārtarāṣṭra) took up his position in the van in order to oppose A. A. was at the very van of his army. Kṛṣṇa and A. blew their conchs. The Kuru army was afraid (VII, 88).—§ 599 (do.), VII, 89-152: FOURTEENTH DAY: 89, 3174, 3180; 90, 3185, 3186; 91, 3230, 3236, 3241, 3242, (3250), 3256, 3259; 92, 3265, 3270, 3272, 3286, 3288, 3294, 3297, 3299, 3301; 93, 3346, 3347, 3366, 3392, 3402, 3405; 94, 3413, 3436, 3446, 3484; 99, 3668, 3674, 3677, 3683, 3684, 3694, 3696, 3697, 3700, (3705), 3720, 3721; 100, 3738, 3743; 101, 3804; 103, 3843, 3847, (3853), 3864, 3873, 3876, 3877, 3879, 3880; 104, 3908, 3913, 3914, 3924; 105, 3954, 3955, 3956, 3963; 106, 3965; 110, 4181, 4198, 4222, 4224, 4233, 4235; 111, 4264, 4265, 4268, 4272, 4274, 4280; 112, 4371; 114, 4467, 4470, 4471, 4473, 4475, 4485; 118, 4700; 119, 4713, 4757; 120, 4758, 4787; 121, 4806; 124, 4991, 5014, 5016; 126, 5110, 5136, 5141; 127, 5191, 5193; 128, 5245; 129, 5279; 130, 5311, 5317, 5338; 131, 5357, 5363; 137, 5629; 139, 5774, 5780, 5810, 5815; 140, 5835, 5841; 142, 5883, 5926, 5928, 5930, 5932, 5933, 5941, 5947; 143, (5967), (5997), 6007; 145, 6056, 6066, 6069, 6085, 6088, 6099, 6103, 6127, 6134, 6139, 6145; 146, 6196, 6204, 6210, 6211, 6252, 6255, 6274, 6288, 6294; 147, 6324, 6386; 148, 6394, 6408, 6418; 149, 6497; 150, 6522; 151, 6535, 6549, 6552, 6576; 152, 6587: A. fought with Durmarshana and caused a terrible carnage (VII, 89); then with Duḥçāsana, whose division was routed (VII, 90). A. met Droṇa and asked leave to slay Jayadratha; Droṇa refused leave and attacked A.; A. avoided him and penetrated into the Kuru army, the Pāṇḍava princes Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas being the protectors of his wheels; he was opposed by Jaya, etc. (α), and the Abhisūhas, etc. (β) (VII, 91). A. employed the Brāhma weapon against Droṇa, avoided him again, fought with Kṛtavarma and the Kāmboja king Sudakṣiṇa; Kṛtavarma prevented Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas from following A., who did not slay Kṛtavarma. Çrutāyudha (δ) attacked A. and was slain by Kṛṣṇa. Then A. slew Sudakṣiṇa; all the troops fled away (VII, 92). A. slew the Abhisūhas, etc. (γ), and slew Çrutāyus and Aeyutāyus with the Aindra weapon, and then their sons Niyutāyus and Dirghāyus. A. caused a great carnage among the Aṅgas (on elephants), the Kalinga king, etc. (on elephants), the Mlecchas, Yavanas, etc. (δ); A. slew the Ambastha king Çrutāyus (VII, 93). Droṇa acknowledged his inability to oppose Arjuna, clad Duryodhana in invulnerable armour and urged him to oppose A. Duryodhana and the Trigartas, etc., proceeded towards the chariot of A. (VII, 94). A. and Kṛṣṇa steadily proceeded towards Jayadratha (description). A. slew Vinda and Anuvinda. While Kṛṣṇa led Arjuna's steeds, A. on foot kept the whole Kuru army in check, and piercing the earth with a weapon made a lake for his steeds to drink from and a hall of arrows for them to rest within; Nārada came to see the lake (VII, 99). Si. and Cā., etc., applauded (VII, 100). The progress of Arjuna (with Kṛṣṇa) became irresistible. Duryodhana (VII, 101) fought with Arjuna (VII, 102), who had also got the same invulnerable armour from Indra; A. shot terrible shafts consecrated with mantras at Duryodhana; this weapon could not be used again lest it should slay A. himself; A. deprived Duryodhana of his chariot, steeds, and weapons; when Kṛṣṇa blew the Pāṇḍava-janya and A. bent the Gāṇḍīva, the Kurus fell down on the ground. The protectors of Jayadratha attacked Kṛṣṇa and A. (VII, 108). A. fought Bhūriṣṭravas, etc. (μ), (and blew the Devadatta), Duryodhana, Aṣvatthāman (VII, 104), and slew many chariot-warriors. A.'s standard bore the sign of an ape with fierce face and tail like that of the lion (ν) (VII, 105). Yudhishtira heard the blare of Pāñcājanya and thought A. to be in distress; he requested Sātyaki to go to A. and bring him intelligence of his safety; A. had said in the Draita wood to Yudhishtira, "even if Kṛṣṇa, etc. (σ), assists us, I shall yet appoint Sātyaki for our aid, since there is none equal to him," and Yudhishtira had witnessed his reverence for A. at Dvārakā, after his return from the tīrthas, etc.; "the day is about to end"; Pradyumna and Sātyaki are equal to A. in bravery (VII, 110). Sātyaki hesitated to comply with Yudhishtira's request on the ground of a counter-command by A.; "the Sauvirakas, etc. (τ), D., As., men, Rā., K., M.-U., etc., cannot cope with A. in battle" (VII, 111). Sātyaki agreed to obey Yudhishtira's order; "the distance from here is 3 yojanas"; he would crush the elephants of the Añjāna breed mounted by Mlecchas (named Rukmarathas), who at Karna's command had returned from the pursuit of A. and were waiting for Sātyaki, and likewise crush those 700 elephants mounted by Kirātās (c) and formerly given by the Kirāta king to A. (VII, 112). Yuyudhāna proceeded towards the chariot of A. (VII, 120). Yudhishtira was anxious because he had not obtained any news of A. and Sātyaki, and thought of sending Bhīma after Sātyaki; Bhīma penetrated to Arjuna, making his presence known by a roar; A. and Kṛṣṇa uttered loud roars in return; Yudhishtira understood that all was safe, and recalled A.'s feats (ππ) (VII, 128). A. bent the Gāṇḍīva, and Kṛṣṇa blew the Pāñcājanya (VII, 129). Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas proceeded towards A. (VII, 130). Bhīma was attacked by Karna; Kṛṣṇa and A. became anxious for Bhīma (VII, 132). Bhīma gladdened A., etc. (ψψ) (VII, 136). Bhīma's weapons being exhausted, he fled away from Karna and defended himself with the bodies of the elephants slain by A.; but, recollecting A.'s vow, he did not take the life of Karna; and Karna, recollecting his promise to Kuntī, did not take the life of Bhīma; A. then turned Karna and then Aṣvatthāman to flight (VII, 139). Sātyaki slew the steeds of Duḥśāsana, gladdening A. and Kṛṣṇa (VII, 140). Sātyaki approached A., who was anxious for Yudhishtira (σε) (VII, 141). As Sātyaki succumbed to Bhūriṣṭravas, A. urged by Kṛṣṇa, cut off one of the arms of Bhūriṣṭravas (VII, 142). Bhūriṣṭravas rebuked A. (ηηη); A. justified his conduct (θθθ). Bhūriṣṭravas (d) desired to die in prāya (description); he acknowledged the justice of A.'s plea, and was blessed by Kṛṣṇa and A. (uu). Though forbidden by Kṛṣṇa, etc. (κκκ), Sātyaki slew Bhūriṣṭravas sitting in prāya (VII, 143). A. proceeded to Jayadratha's chariot; Duryodhana, etc. (μμμ), encountered A. Duryodhana prevailed upon Karna to protect Jayadratha (ννν); A. deprived Karna of his steeds, chariot, and charioteer. A. invoked the Vāruṇa weapon and caused a great carnage (VII, 145). A. employed the Aindra weapon, etc. (description). A. cut off Jayadratha's standard and slew his charioteer; Jayadratha was put into their centre by six chariot-warriors. Kṛṣṇa covered the sun by means of his yoga power, so that all, except A., thought the sun to have set, and he urged A. to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay; A. caused such a carnage that the warriors abandoned Jayadratha in fear and fled away; Kṛṣṇa again urged A. to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay, telling him about the curse of Jayadratha's father Vṛddhakṣhatra (g), who was still engaged in penances outside Samantapūcaka; therefore A. should make the head fall upon the lap of Vṛddhakṣhatra himself, lest A.'s head should crack into 100 pieces; this A. did, and as the head fell down from Vṛddhakṣhatra's lap the latter's head split into 100 pieces. Kṛṣṇa then withdrew the darkness he had created; Kṛṣṇa and A. blew their conchs, etc.; A. fought with many mighty chariot-warriors (VII, 146); Kṛpa (at whose death-like swoon A. grieved), Aṣvatthāman (who fled), Karna; Kṛṣṇa told A. to avoid Karna, because the latter was still in possession of the lance that Indra had given him. "In this world there are only three mighty archers, Kṛṣṇa, A., and Sātyaki," said Sanjaya (VII, 147). Bhīma tried to induce A. to permit him to slay Karna; A. vowed to slay Karna's son Vṛshasena in his presence. Kṛṣṇa congratulated A. (φφφ), who attributed the victory to Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa pointed out to A. the results of that day's battle (VII, 148). Kṛṣṇa and A. congratulated Yudhishtira (ψψψ) (VII, 149). A fierce battle ensued (VII, 152).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.), VII, 153-183: THE NIGHT COMBAT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: 159, 7024, 7044, 7049, 7107; 164, 7325, 7346, 7350; 165, 7371; 167, 7479, 7502, 7503, 7505, 7508; 170, 7660, 7661; 171, 7704, 7705, 7706, 7707, 7709; 172, 7760; 181, (8213); 182, 8275; 183, 8298: A dreadful battle took place between the Pāñcālas and the Kauravas (VII, 153); A., etc. (β), fought with Droṇa (VII, 154); do.; Duryodhana urged Çakuni to proceed against A. together with Karna, etc. (κ) (VII, 156). Drupada's division, which fled before Droṇa, was rallied by A. and Bhīma, followed by the Kaikayas, etc. (σ) (VII, 157). Karna vowed to slay A., etc. (ν) (VII, 158). Aṣvatthāman, etc. (ββ), fought with A. in order to rescue Karna; A. slew the steeds and driver of Karna, etc.; Duryodhana fought with A.; Kṛpa urged Aṣvatthāman to proceed against A.; he made Duryodhana desist from an encounter with A. (VII, 159). A. slew the Yaudheyas, etc. (ξξ); the Pāñcālas fled, but were rallied by Bhīma and A.; the Kauravas fled (VII, 161). Kṛṣṇa told Yudhishtira not to fight with Droṇa, he should go to Duryodhana, A., and Bhīma (VII, 162). Duryodhana commanded his troops to take up lighted lamps and torches (VII, 163). "Karna will vanquish A., etc.," said Droṇa; A. fought against the Kauravas (VII, 164). Alambusha fought with A. (VII, 165). A. vanquished Alambusha and attacked Droṇa (VII, 167). A new battle ensued (description) (VII, 169); the Gāṇḍīva and the rattle of A.'s chariot were heard; Duryodhana despatched Çakuni against A. (VII, 170). A. deprived Çakuni of his chariot, etc.; Kṛṣṇa and A. blew their conchs (VII, 171). The Pāṇḍava host fled; A. and Kṛṣṇa rallied the retreating troops (σσ) (VII, 172). Dhṛṣṭadyumna was deprived of his chariot by Karna, and ascended the chariot of A. A. and Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira conversed about Karna; A. asked Kṛṣṇa to proceed towards Karna. Kṛṣṇa said that none except A. and Ghaṭotkaca could encounter him; but A. must not do it as long as he retained the lance presented by Indra; "but Ghaṭotkaca will vanquish Karna." They prevailed upon Ghaṭotkaca to encounter Karna (ττ) (VII, 173). Ghaṭotkaca slew Alambusha and fought with Karna (VII, 174). Kṛṣṇa urged A. to proceed in Bhīma's wake and resist Droṇa's division (VII, 177). A. shot many Kṣhatṛiyas (VII, 178).

Karna slew Ghaṭotkaca with his celestial dart (VII, 179). Kṛṣṇa with transports of delight embraced A., because Karna's dart could no more kill A. (VII, 180). Kṛṣṇa's policy was the reason why Karna had never hurled the fatal dart at A. (VII, 182). — § 601 (Droṇavadhap.), VII, 184-185: CONTINUATION OF THE NIGHT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: 184, 8395; 185, 8431, 8440, 8441, 8445, 8448, 8449: A. granted permission to the warriors to sleep. D., R., and soldiers applauded A.; all the combatants lay down on the field to sleep (description); the Kaurava troops blessed A. for his act of kindness. When the moon rose, both hosts rose from sleep and again prepared for battle (VII, 184). Droṇa described the extent of A.'s might and prowess (γ); Duryodhana vowed that he would slay A. that day. Droṇa was of opinion that it was only right that Duryodhana and Çakuni should proceed against A. (VII, 185). — § 602 (do.), VII, 186-192: FIFTEENTH DAY: 186, 8462, 8465; 187, 8540, 8543; 188, 8597, 8605, 8607, 8608, 8610; 189, 8691; 190, 8701, 8702; 192, 8875: When three-fourths of that night had worn away the battle once more commenced. Urged by Kṛṣṇa A. moved to the left of Droṇa and Karna. Bhīma urged A. to put forth all his vigour. A. fought with Droṇa, Karna, etc. (ζ) (description); he was assisted by Drupada, etc. Soon the morning sun arose (VII, 186). The battle was revived (VII, 187). D., G., R., Si., Aps., Y., and Rā. applauded Droṇa and A., saying that "this is no human, etc. (μ), but an exalted Brāhma encounter"; both employed the Brāhma weapon; the engagement became general (VII, 188). A. attacked the Kurus, and Droṇa attacked the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 189). The Pāṇḍavas feared, thinking that A. would not fight with Droṇa. Kṛṣṇa told A. to abandon virtue and let some one tell Droṇa that Aṣvatthāman had been slain in battle. A. did not approve; others approved, Yudhishtira, however, with great difficulty (VII, 190). A fierce encounter took place between Droṇa and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Sātyaki rescued Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and was applauded by Kṛṣṇa, A., and Si., etc. (VII, 191). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna cut off Droṇa's head, though forbidden by A. and blamed by everybody (VII, 192). — § 603 (Nārāyaṇa-nāstram.), VII, 193-202: THE LAST PART OF THE FIFTEENTH DAY: 193, 8957, 8958; 195, 9002; 196, 9037, (9054); 197, 9082, 9119, 9123, 9125; 198, 9132; 199, 9246, (9247); 200, 9259, 9267, 9337; 201, 9426, 9429, 9431, 9444, 9479; 202, 9645: Aṣvatthāman was filled with rage; he said there was none equal to him and A. in knowledge of arms; he had a weapon (the Nārāyaṇa weapon) that neither A., etc. (δ), knew, presented by Nārāyaṇa to his father, with the promise that no man should ever be his equal in battle; only this weapon must never be used in haste, etc., and never be hurled upon persons that abandoned their chariots and weapons in battle, etc.; with this he would rout and slay the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ι) (VII, 195). Terrible signs appeared in nature. Yudhishtira spoke about the matter to A. (κ); A. in reply described the prowess of Aṣvatthāman and the unrighteousness of the Pāṇḍavas in slaying Droṇa (λ); "all of us have passed the greater parts of our lives; the days that remain to us are few; this exceedingly unrighteous act has stained what is left; . . . I did not interfere, as he was about to be slain; for this fault I have already sunk into hell, overcome with shame" (VII, 196). Bhīmasena, reproaching A., vindicated the deed (μ) (VII, 197). A. cast oblique glances upon Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna taunted Sātyaki for the slaughter of Bhūriçravas (ρ); Sātyaki would slay Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna asked Bhīma to let him slay Sātyaki (τ); then he and A. would slay the enemies. Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira restored peace (VII, 198). Aṣvatthāman invoked the Nārāyaṇa weapon (description). Kṛṣṇa prevailed upon the troops to lay down their weapons and alight from their chariots; Bhīmasena alone refused to do so. A. said that his vow was that the Gāṇḍīva should not be used against the Nārāyaṇa weapon, kine, and brahmins. Bhīma attacked Aṣvatthāman, but was overwhelmed by the energy of the Nārāyaṇa weapon (VII, 199). A. covered Bhīmasena with the Vāruṇa weapon; he and Kṛṣṇa forcibly brought Bhīma down from his chariot, making him abandon his weapons. Then the Nārāyaṇa weapon became pacified. It could not be used twice. A., etc. (γγ), fought with Aṣvatthāman (VII, 200). A. addressed Aṣvatthāman in harsh words (δδ), though A. and Aṣvatthāman loved each other. Aṣvatthāman became angry with A. and especially with Kṛṣṇa, touched water, and invoked the Āgneya weapon, the result being sinister omens and a great slaughter in the Pāṇḍava army; A. invoked the Brāhma weapon; the darkness was dispelled, etc., a full akshauhini of the Pāṇḍava troops had been felled; Kṛṣṇa and A. were unwounded; Aṣvatthāman lost heart and ran away; he met Vyāsa, who told him the history of Nārāyaṇa (δ); "Nara and Nārāyaṇa are A. and Kṛṣṇa" (VII, 201). A. met with Vyāsa and inquired of him about the invisible person who aided him in the battle. Vyāsa said that it was Mahādeva himself, and related the tale of the sacrifice of Dakṣha, the destruction of Tripura (d), etc. — § 604 (Karna.), VIII, 1-9: THE NIGHT AFTER DROṆA'S DEATH, AND THE SIXTEENTH MORNING, AND BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH DAY: 3, 72; 5, 101, 143, 146; 9, 267, 313: The Kurus made Karna their leader; he fought for two days and was then slain by A. (VIII, 1). Sañjaya related to Dhṛtarāṣṭra that Karna was made generalissimo and slain by A. on the second day (VIII, 3). — § 605 (do.), VIII, 10-32: SIXTEENTH DAY: 11, 428; 16, 610, 611, 616, 618, 621, 627, 628, 633, 639, 640, 641, 642; 17, 663, 665, 666, 667, 674, 675, 677, 679, 686; 18, 688, 694, 695, 697, 708; 19, 715, 718, 719, 721, 729, 731, 762; 20, 772, 774; 21, 821, 824; 26, 1053; 27, 1080, 1081; 30, 1217, 1219, 1223, 1227, 1237, 1245; 31, 1249, 1257, 1286, 1289, 1295, 1298, 1311, 1315; 32, 1340, 1344: After Droṇa's fall the Kauravas fought for a long time with the Pāṇḍavas (Arjuna). On the approach of the evening twilight the Kauravas retired to their encampment; they held a consultation in the night; Karna was installed as generalissimo (ι) (VIII, 10). Yudhishtira asked A. to array the Pāṇḍava army and slay Karna. The Pāṇḍava army was arranged after the form of a half-moon, A. in the middle (ω); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas became the protectors of A.'s chariot-wheels (VIII, 11). A. fought with the Samçaptakas (VIII, 13, 16) and Aṣvatthāman (VIII, 16). The Kalinga, Vaṅga, and Nishāda heroes attacked A. with a division of elephants, which was broken; Kṛṣṇa urged A. not to spare Aṣvatthāman, who was at last borne away by his steeds; Kṛṣṇa and A. proceeded towards the Samçaptakas (VIII, 17). Urged by Kṛṣṇa, A. slew the Magadha chief Daṇḍadhāra (lord of Girivraja), (on an elephant), and then his brother Daṇḍa; A. once more proceeded against the Samçaptakas (VIII, 18), whom he slaughtered; A. slew Ugrāyudha's son; urged by Kṛṣṇa, A. defeated the remnant of the Samçaptakas in order not to lose any time in slaying Karna (VIII, 19). Kṛṣṇa said to A. that he did not see Yudhishtira (VIII, 21). A. fought the Trigartas, etc. (λλ), slew king Qatruñjaya, and Suçruta's son and Candradeva; king Satyasena wounded Kṛṣṇa and was slain by A., who then slew Citravarma and Mitrasena, etc., and wounded Suçarma; all the Saṃcāptakas attacked A., who invoked the Aindra weapon (description); the hostile army fled away almost entirely (VIII, 27). Karna slaughtered the Pāñcālas, A. the Trigartas, etc., when the sun had passed the meridian (VIII, 28). In the afternoon A. and Kṛṣṇa (having said their daily prayers and worshipped Bhava) destroyed the Kurus; A. fought Duryodhana, Aṣvatthāman, Karna. At the close of the day both armies withdrew; Rā. and Pç., etc., came (VIII, 30). Dhṛtarāṣṭra exalted the prowess of A. (cc). Karna assured Duryodhana that he would slay A. next day; at dawn he repeated his pledge: "A. is superior to me only by having Kṛṣṇa, the creator of the universe, for his charioteer, the chariot given him by Agni, his steed, and his standard with the ape." He wanted Çalya ("who is superior to Kṛṣṇa") as his charioteer (VIII, 31).—§ 606 (do.), VIII, 35, 1657: Duryodhana prevailed upon Çalya to be Karna's charioteer by relating how Brahman had acted as such to Rudra, and by pointing to the fact that Kṛṣṇa had become the charioteer of A., and would fight if A. were slain (VIII, 35).—§ 607 (do.), VIII, 36-45: 36, 1688; 37, †1722, †1728, †1735, †1740, †1741, †1745; 38, 1756, 1757, 1758, 1760, 1763, 1766, 1768, 1771, 1774; 39, 1791, †1794, †1796, †1797, †1798, 1806; 40, 1818, 1829; 41, 1958, 1960, 1961; 42, 1962; 45, 2111: When the morning came, Duryodhana prevailed upon Çalya to become Karna's charioteer. Karna told Çalya to urge the steeds that he might slay A., etc. (β) (VIII, 36). Karna boasted (γ); Çalya ridiculed him and praised A. (δ). Karna proceeded on his chariot and inquired after A. (VIII, 37), promising every Pāṇḍava soldier that he who pointed out to him A. would receive whatever wealth he desired (VIII, 38). Çalya said that Karna would have a sight of A. without troubling to make a search, and asked him to abandon his desire for a single combat with A. (VIII, 39). Karna said that Kṛṣṇa and A. were well known to him but did not inspire him with fright; notwithstanding the curse of Paraçu-Rāma he would slay A.; he would employ the Brāhma weapon, which A. would never be able to escape, if only the wheels of Karna's chariot did not sink into the earth that day according to the brahman's curse whose homa-cow's calf he had inadvertently struck (VIII, 42).—§ 608 (do.), VIII, 46-96: THE SEVENTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE: 46, 2130, 2132, 2152, 2154, 2161, 2177, 2193, 2197, 2199, 2201, 2206; 47, 2212, 2217, 2219; 50, 2415, 2421; 53, 2574, 2598, 2604; 56, 2774, 2784, 2801, 2810, 2828; 57, 2849; 58, 2857, 2858, 2894, 2898, 2903; 59, 2955, 2966, 2970; 60, 3039, 3055, 3063; 61, 3079; 62, 3142; 63, 3198; 64, 3217, 3219, 3223, 3230, 3231, 3240, 3241, 3272; 65, †3292, †3293, †3294, 3307; 66, 3309, 3317, 3335; 68, 3386; 69, (3440), (3470), 3483; 70, 3492, 3515; 71, 3562; 72, 3605, 3615; 73, 3634; 74, 3791, 3803; 76, 3842, 3859, 3860; 77, 3861, 3862, 3874, 3875, 3876, 3878, 3879, 3881; 79, 4004, 4025, 4032, 4037, 4066, 4067, 4068, 4072, 4075, 4085; 80, 4118; 81, 4124, 4145, 4146, 4157, 4159, 4161; 83, 4257; 84, 4301; 85, 4329, 4340, 4347; 86, 4349, (4364); 87, 4383, 4408, 4409, 4415, 4416, 4421, 4423, 4425, 4429, 4430, 4437, 4461, 4462, 4476, 4479; 88, 4505; 89, 4524, 4532, 4533, 4534, 4535, 4536, 4539, 4559, 4591; 90, 4623, 4625, 4626, 4632, 4633, 4635, 4658, 4662, 4664, 4667, 4670, 4671, 4672, 4675, 4685, 4688, 4690, 4696, 4698, 4701, 4715, 4718, 4720, 4725, 4731, 4736, 4741; 91, 4766, 4780, 4807, 4811, 4816; 92, 4819, 4826, 4829; 93, 4834, 4851, 4867; 94, 4905, 4919, 4947, 4956, 1960; 95, 4977; 96, 4990, 4992, 4997, 5008, 5016, 5027: Yudhishtira spoke to A. of the hostile array; A. should proceed against Karna, etc.; Çalya pointed out to Karna the chariot of A. (δ). A.'s chariot of which Agni Vaiçvānara, the first (pūrvāḥ), the brahmān, Indu (i.e. Soma), had become the steeds, [and] that was originally (prathamam) born from him, [that chariot] the gods and the brahmins knew; which had in days of old borne Brahman, Içāna (i.e. Çiva), Indra, and Varuṇa; riding on that primeval (ādyam) chariot, Keçava (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) and A. now proceeded to battle . . . with white steeds. How the Saṃcāptakas threatened to slay A., etc.; Çalya dissuaded Karna from trying to slay A. (VIII, 46). A. arrayed his troops, headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna (with steeds white like pigeons); by the side of Dhṛṣṭadyumna were the Draupadeyas. A. fought the Saṃcāptakas (VIII, 47). A. fought the Saṃcāptakas, etc. (η); A. fought Suçarma; A. repeatedly invoked the Nāga weapon, paralyzing the logs (encircled with snakes) of the Saṃcāptakas; Suçarma invoked the Sauparṇa weapon; birds came down and devoured the snakes; A. sat down, recovered, and invoked the Aindra weapon; the battle became awful (VIII, 53). A. fought the Saṃcāptakas; he addressed Kṛṣṇa upon beholding Karna's (ε) prowess, and as the Saṃcāptakas were defeated (when the sun had ascended the meridian), A. pierced through the Kuru host. Duryodhana once more urged the Saṃcāptakas against him. Having slain 10,000 kṣatṛīyas, A. came to the further wing of the Saṃcāptakas, which was protected by the Kāmbojas; the younger brother of the Kāmboja chief Sudakṣiṇa was slain by A.; the Kāmbojas, etc. (τ), were slain. A. fought Aṣvatthāman; Si. and Cā. arrived; Kṛṣṇa urged A. not to spare Aṣvatthāman, who swooned away and was borne away by his charioteer; A. slaughtered the Kuru troops, etc. (VIII, 56). A. pointed out to Kṛṣṇa that the Pāṇḍava army was fleeing before Karna, and that Yudhishtira was nowhere to be seen; "the third part of the day still remains." A. proceeded to Yudhishtira; Kṛṣṇa described the field of battle to A. (γγ). A terrible battle ensued (VIII, 58). A remnant only of the Saṃcāptakas were left unslaughtered. Dhṛṣṭadyumna was worsted by Aṣvatthāman and rescued by A.; A. proceeded towards the Saṃcāptakas (VIII, 59). Kṛṣṇa pointed out to A. that Yudhishtira was being pursued by many Dhṛtarāṣṭras and was in great danger; Karna would soon come against A. and was protected by Duryodhana; he should be slain. A. then destroyed the remnant of his foes; the Saṃcāptakas fled (VIII, 60). A. fought against Aṣvatthāman (VIII, 61). A. appeared (VIII, 62). Çalya exhorted Karna to fight with A., but in vain; he once more reminded Karna of A., etc. (ηη) (VIII, 63). A. fought with Aṣvatthāman; Aṣvatthāman employed the Aindra weapon, which A. neutralized with a mighty weapon created by Indra; at last Aṣvatthāman was borne away by his steeds. The Śrījāyas called upon A. and Kṛṣṇa. A. spoke to Kṛṣṇa about Karna; Kṛṣṇa asked him first to find Yudhishtira (VIII, 64). A. met with Bhīma and asked him to bring intelligence of Yudhishtira; but they agreed that A. should go to Yudhishtira while Bhīma should resist the Saṃcāptakas. A. and Kṛṣṇa found Yudhishtira lying on his bed (VIII, 65). A. swore to slay Karna and all the foes that day (VIII, 67). Yudhishtira censured A., thinking that he had run away from the battle leaving Bhīma unsupported (λλλ), several times invoking him to give up the Gāṇḍīva to somebody else (VIII, 68). A. drew his sword in order to strike off Yudhishtira's head in fulfilment of his vow regarding the person who would tell him to give up the Gāṇḍīva (μμμ); Kṛṣṇa addressed A. on the nature of truth (ννν); A. said he must keep his vow (ξξξ); Kṛṣṇa suggested that A., by insulting Yudhishtira, by addressing him with "thou," would be regarded as having slain him (ooo) (VIII, 69). Urged by Kṛṣṇa, A. insulted Yudhishtira in a long speech (πππ); then he became despondent and desired to cut off his own head; Kṛṣṇa urged him to utter his own praises, as self-praise was equal to self-destruction. A. praised himself (ρρρ) and asked for Yudhishtira's forgiveness, promising to slay Karna and rescue Bhīma. Kṛṣṇa induced him to forgive both himself and A. (σσσ) (VIII, 70). Speeches of Kṛṣṇa, A., and Yudhishtira on the same topic (τττ) (VIII, 71). A. proceeded to slay Karna, having obtained Yudhishtira's leave; Kṛṣṇa addressed A. in order to raise his spirits (υυυ) (VIII, 72); continuation (υυυ) (VIII, 73). A.'s cheerful reply to Kṛṣṇa (ψψψ) (VIII, 74). Sañjaya related: A. slew many (VIII, 75). Bhīma said to his charioteer Viçoka that he was anxious about A. and Yudhishtira; Viçoka pointed out to Bhīma that A. was returning to battle (ωωω) (VIII, 76). A. and Bhīma attacked the Kaurava army (description) (VIII, 77). A. produced a river of blood (description). Requested by A. (ζ'), Kṛṣṇa brought him to Karna; Duryodhana attacked A.; A. vanquished Aśvatthāman, Kṛpa, and Kṛtavarma; Çikhaṇḍin, etc. ('), proceeding towards A., checked the foes (VIII, 79). A., avoiding Karna, proceeded to the rescue of Bhīma; he informed Bhīma that Yudhishtira was well; he slew ten sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (VIII, 80). A. was assailed by ninety Saṃçaptakas as he was proceeding towards Karna's chariot; he slew them; so also many Kauravas and a force of Mlecchas, mounted on 1,300 elephants under the command of Duryodhana. Bhīma rushed towards A., and destroyed a small unslaughtered remnant of the Kauravas; then he followed A. in his rear (VIII, 81). Kṛṣṇa urged A. to slay Karna; A. proceeded with Bhīmasena (VIII, 82). Bhīmasena took up a little of Duḥçāsana's blood and drank it (μ'), addressing Kṛṣṇa and A., and vowing soon to slay Duryodhana (VIII, 83). Urged by Bhīma and Nakula, A. proceeded towards Vṛshasena (VIII, 84). A. slew Karna's son Vṛshasena, and threatened to slay Karna, as Bhīma would slay Duryodhana; A. attacked Karna (VIII, 85); Kṛṣṇa addressed A. (τ'); A.'s reply (υ') (VIII, 86); description of A. and Karna (φ'); As., Yātudhāna, Gh., etc., sided with Karna; the Vedas, etc. (χ'), took the side of A.; the smaller snakes all sided with Karna; V., M., Sā., R., V.-D., A., and Agni, etc. (χ'), sided with A., while all Ā. sided with Karna; the Vaiçyas, etc. (ψ'), sided with Karna; P., etc. (χ'), with A.; the Pretas, Pç., Rā., etc., with Karna; D.-r., B.-r., R.-r., with A., as also G. headed by Tumburu. With the Prādehyas and Mauneyas, G., and Aps., and many wise sages, having wolves for their vehicles, came to witness the encounter that was also witnessed by D., Dū., G., N., Y., etc., M.-r., P. (subsisting upon Svadhā), etc., and Brahman with B.-r., and Prajūpatis, and Bhava. Indra wished that A. should vanquish Karna; Sūrya, that Karna should vanquish A.; the gods urged Brahman that the success of both should be equal, Indra that A. and Kṛṣṇa should win; Brahman and Içāna (i.e. Çiva) said that the victory of A. was certain (ω): "let Karna obtain identity with V. or M., let him be worshipped in heaven with Droṇa and Bhīshma." Indra acquiesced by their words. Description of Karna's and A.'s chariots; the ape on A.'s banner attacked the elephant's rope on Karna's banner. Kṛṣṇa and Çalya darted keen glances at each other, and so did A. and Karna. Çalya said that he would slay both Kṛṣṇa and A. if Karna was slain; Kṛṣṇa said that Karna could not slay A.; otherwise, the destruction of the universe would be at hand, and he would himself slay Karna and Çalya. A. said that that day the wives of Karna would become widows (aa') (VIII, 87). In the welkin D., N., As., Si., Y., G., Rā., Aps., and B.-r., etc., looked on. The battle commenced. A. defeated Duryodhana, etc. (VIII, 88); description of the battle between A. and Karna; A. employed an Āgneya weapon, which was neutralized by Karna with a Vāruṇa weapon by means of clouds, which was in its turn dispelled by A. by means of a Vāyavya weapon; A. employed the Aindra weapon (? dayitam deva-rājñah; Mahendrayāstram), Karna the Bhārgava weapon. Seeing A.'s weapons neutralized by Karna, Bhīma (aa') and Kṛṣṇa (aξ') urged A. to put forth his strength. A. bowed to Brahman and invoked the Brāhma weapon, which could be applied by the mind alone; Karna neutralized it; urged by Bhīma, A. applied a second Brāhma weapon, which caused a great carnage among the Kaurava troops (description). A. shot at Karna and Çalya and slew Sabhāpati, etc. The Kauravas urged Karna to slay A. Yudhishtira appeared in order to witness the encounter. A.'s bowstring burst; Karna pierced A. (aδ). Karna employed five snakes as arrows; they were cut off by A., who slew 2,000 Kurus. The Kurus fled, leaving Karna to fight alone with A. (VIII, 89). The snake Açvasena entered into Karna's quiver in the form of an arrow. Karna and A. were fanned and sprinkled with fragrant sandal-water by many Aps., staying in the welkin, and Çakra and Sūrya gently brushed their faces with their hands. Karna aimed that arrow which he had long kept for A.'s destruction. Omens appeared; Karna did not know that Açvasena had entered his arrow. Kṛṣṇa with his feet pressed A.'s ear about a cubit into the earth and the snake-arrow only broke his diadem (made by Svayambhū for Indra > A.); incapable of being crushed by Rudra, etc. (a'). Karna would not shoot the same weapon again. Açvasena then of his own accord came towards A. in the shape of an arrow; Kṛṣṇa informed A.; A. cut off the snake, and Kṛṣṇa raised the chariot from the earth. Once, when Karna was stupefied, A. did not wish to slay him, but he was taught by Kṛṣṇa never to spare an enemy. Karna invoked the Brāhma weapon and A. the Aindra weapon, which was neutralized by Karna; urged by Kṛṣṇa to shoot "high weapons," A. shot the Brāhma weapon. Karna cut off eleven bowstrings of A.'s one after another, not knowing that A. had 100 strings to his bow; urged by Kṛṣṇa to strike Karna with "superior weapons," A. then consecrated another celestial weapon with mantras, uniting the Raudra weapon with it. At that time the earth swallowed up Karna's wheels. Karna asked A. to wait for a moment till he had raised his sunken wheel (VIII, 90). Kṛṣṇa urged A. to pierce Karna with a celestial weapon; A. kindled with fury; blazing flames of fire seemed to emanate from all the pores of his body. Both Karna and A. invoked the Brāhma weapon; A. shot an Agni weapon, which was neutralized by Karna with the Vāruṇa weapon, spreading darkness in all directions, which A. dispelled with the Vāyavya weapon. Pierced by a shaft of Karna's, A. began to reel, etc.; Karna in vain endeavoured to extricate his chariot. Recovering his senses, A. took up an Añjalika weapon. Urged by Kṛṣṇa, A. cut off Karna's standard, and then struck off Karna's head with an Añjalika weapon (the R. loudly crying out "Peace be to the universe!") (VIII, 91). A. fought the chariots of the Kauravas. A. and Kṛṣṇa blew their conchs; D., G., men, Cā., M.-r., Y., and M.-U. congratulated A. (VIII, 94). Urged by Kṛṣṇa (aṇ), A. presented himself to Yudhishtira, who greeted A. and Kṛṣṇa. Yudhishtira, with Kṛṣṇa and A., came back to the field to have a look at Karna's body (VIII, 96).—§ 609 (Çalyap.), IX, 1-2: 2, 119: Çalya was made the commander of the army (IX, 1). Dhṛtarāshṭra's lament (IX, 2).—§ 610 (do.), IX, 3-7: 3, 143, 160; 4, 207, 208, 234; 5, 251; 7, 351: A. proceeded towards the chariots; he fought with 25,000 foot-soldiers; Cekitāna, etc. (κ), having slain a large number, A. attacked the rest (IX, 3). The troops passed the night at the foot of Himavat (IX, 6). Kṛṣṇa said that Çalya was equal to Bhīma and superior to A. (χ) (IX, 7).—§ 611 (do.), IX, 8-28: THE BATTLE OF THE FORENOON OF THE EIGHTEENTH DAY: 8, 398; 9, 448; 11, 567; 14, 705, 708, 710, 714, 730, 737, 749, 750, 751; 18, 961; 19, 1015; 24, 1325; 25, 1364, 1395; 27, 1471, 1480, 1485: A. went against Kṛtavarman and the Saṃçaptakas (IX, 8). A. and Bhīmasena stupefied their foes (IX, 9). A., having slaughtered the Saṃçaptakas, encountered Çalya (IX, 10). Duryodhana fought with A. (IX, 11). A. fought with Açvatthāman (IX, 12). A. fought against Açvatthāman and the Trigartas; he destroyed 2,000 cars (IX, 14). The Pāṇḍavas (in the very sight of Kṛṣṇa and A.) were afflicted by the Kurus; A. fought with Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman. Yudhishtira said that A. should protect his rear; A. began to slay the Kaurava troops (IX, 16). Yudhishtira slew Çalya with a celestial dart (IX, 17). A., etc. (ββ), began to slaughter the Madrakas (IX, 18). Also the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra almost all turned away from the fight at midday; A. fought against the chariots; Duryodhana rallied a small force by a spirited address (ζζ); the Pāṇḍavas, and especially A., rushed against them (IX, 19). The whole army of Duryodhana fled except Duryodhana (IX, 21). A. (desiring to exterminate the Kurus) addressed Kṛṣṇa, recounting the loss sustained by the Kurus (νν), and attacked the remnant of the Kuru army, and caused a great slaughter (IX, 24). A. and Bhīma, etc. (οο), slew 3,000 elephants, encompassing the Pāṇḍava brothers; A. had afflicted Sañjaya's men; Bhīma and A. destroyed the elephants (IX, 25). Kṛṣṇa urged A. to destroy the remnant of Duryodhana's troops (σσ); A. ascended his chariot (ττ); A. fought against Suçarman and Çakuni, the Trigartas, slew Satyakarman, Satyeshu, and the Prasthala ruler Suçarman, and the latter's thirty-five sons, etc., and then proceeded against the remnant of the Bharata host (IX, 27).—§ 612 (Hradapr.), IX, 29-31: 29, 1568, 1600; 30, 1725: the followers of Çakuni attacked the Pāṇḍavas; A. and Bhīmasena came to the rescue of Sahadeva; A. slew them. Duryodhana abandoned his slain steed, and fled away without a companion, on foot towards a lake, taking up his mace. The Pāṇḍavas with A. baffled the purpose of the Kurus. In Duryodhana's army no great chariot-warrior was alive save Açvatthāman, Kṛpa, and Kṛtavarman (IX, 29). When the sun had set, A., etc. (ε), started towards the lake (IX, 30). Yudhishtira in vain exhorted Duryodhana to come out from the lake and fight with them (IX, 31).—§ 613 (Gadāyuddh.), IX, 32-33: 33, 1890, 1921: Yudhishtira (though reproved by Kṛṣṇa) granted Duryodhana that if he could slay even one of the five Pāṇḍavas he would continue king (IX, 32); Bhīmasena undertook to encounter him with the mace (IX, 33).—§ 614 (do.), IX, 34: Bala-Rāma (δ) came to see the encounter.—§ 615 (do.), IX, 35-65: 58, 3246; 61, 3416; 62, 3474, 3477: According to the proposal of Bala-Rāma, Yudhishtira, with his brothers and Duryodhana, proceeded to Samantapañcaka (IX, 55). A. inquires of Kṛṣṇa about the relative merits of the two combatants. Kṛṣṇa said that by fighting fairly Bhīma would never succeed in vanquishing Duryodhana. A. struck his own left thigh before the eyes of Bhīmasena, who understood the sign and fractured Duryodhana's thigh with his mace (IX, 56). Kṛṣṇa caused A. to take down the Gāṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quivers, and then to dismount; then Kṛṣṇa also dismounted; the celestial Ape on his standard disappeared, and the chariot (burnt by Droṇa and Karna with the Brāhma weapon) with its steeds, etc., was reduced to ashes. At Kṛṣṇa's suggestion the Pāṇḍavas and Sātyaki resolved to pass the night at a spot outside the camp, on the banks of the Oghavati. They then despatched Kṛṣṇa to Hāstinapura in order to pacify the wrath of Gāndhārī and console her and Dhṛtarāshṭra (IX, 62). Duryodhana induced Kṛpa to instal Açvatthāman as the Kuru generalissimo; then they took leave of Duryodhana and left him alone (IX, 65).—§ 616 (Sauptikap.), X, 1-9: 4, 171; 9, 509: Açvatthāman, Kṛpa, and Kṛtavarman murdered all who were present in the Pāṇḍava camp during the night. "A. is incapable of being vanquished by D., As., G., Y., and Rā." They went to Duryodhana and informed him; Duryodhana died (X, 9).—§ 617 (Aśhikap.), X, 10-18: 10, 550; 13, 652 (satya-karma); 14, 670, 671; 15, 695, 696, 706: The Pāṇḍavas with Kṛṣṇa proceeded in the track of Bhīmasena and Nakula in pursuit of Açvatthāman: Kṛṣṇa, A., and Yudhishtira on Kṛṣṇa's chariot. Açvatthāman shot a celestial weapon "for the destruction of the Pāṇḍavas" (X, 13). Urged by Kṛṣṇa, A. shot the [Brāhma] weapon. Extraordinary omens appeared in nature; Nārada and Vyāsa, seeking to save the three worlds, stood between the two fires (X, 14). A. withdrew his weapon, but Açvatthāman could not. Vyāsa praised A. for not having used the Brahmaçiras weapon before (X, 15). Kṛṣṇa said that Uttara's son Parikshit would be stillborn, but be brought to life by Kṛṣṇa, etc. Açvatthāman's gem was placed upon Yudhishtira (X, 16).—§ 618 (Jalaprādānikap.), XI, 1-15: 15, 412: Dhṛtarāshṭra resolved to visit the field of battle accompanied by the Kuru ladies (XI, 10). Yudhishtira and his brothers set out to meet Dhṛtarāshṭra, accompanied by Kṛṣṇa, etc. (κ); they met the weeping ladies on the way (λ), and saluted Dhṛtarāshṭra, who reluctantly embraced Yudhishtira and broke an iron statue of Bhīma (XI, 12). Commanded by Dhṛtarāshṭra, the Pāṇḍava brothers proceeded with Kṛṣṇa to see Gāndhārī (XI, 14). A. moved away to the rear of Kṛṣṇa (XI, 15).—§ 619 (Strivil.), XI, 16-25: 18, 540; 23, 660; 24, 684, 696: With the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa and all the Kuru ladies Dhṛtarāshṭra proceeded to the field of battle. The Pāñcāla and the Kuru ladies were plunged into unutterable distress (description). Gāndhārī cursed Kṛṣṇa.—§ 620 (Çrāddhap.), XI, 26-27: 27, 807: Urged by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Yudhishtira ordered Sudharman, etc. (α), to cause the funeral rites of the slain (β) to be duly performed; they burnt them upon funeral pyres. Then Yudhishtira and Dhṛtarāṣṭra proceeded towards the Gaṅgā (XI, 26). The Kuru ladies, etc., performed the water rites for their fallen kinsmen on the Gaṅgā. Kuntī, in a paroxysm of grief, disclosed to her sons the truth about the birth of Karna (γ), whom A. had slain, being in reality his brother (XI, 27).—§ 621 (Rājadh.): XII, 1, 13, 34, 36, 39; 2, 47, 55; 7, 158 (Yudhishtira's lament before A.); 8, 201, (203) (A. addressed Yudhishtira, justifying the battle and applauding the acquisition of wealth, quoting Nahusha, etc.); 9 (unmoved by A.'s words, Yudhishtira desired to lead the life of a religious recluse).—§ 622 (do.), XII, 11, (305), (331): A. recited the story of the discourse between Çakra (in the form of a golden bird) and certain youths (R.) desirous of leading a forest life.—§ 623 (do.), XII, 12, 333; 15, 424, (425): A. applauded [him who wields] the rod of chastisement; 16, 482.—§ 624 (do.), XII, 18, 535, (536), (571): A. recited the story of the discourse between the Videha king Janaka and his queen, in which the latter explained the claims of a life of poverty and renunciation.—§ 625 (do.): XII, 19, 579, 595: Yudhishtira's reply to A. on the vanity of wealth.—§ 627 (do.): XII, 22, 636 (A. justified before Yudhishtira the slaughter of foes in battle, citing Indra).—§ 629 (do.), XII, 25: Seeing A. angry, Yudhishtira declared to Vyāsa that earthly rule could not give him any delight.—§ 630 (do.), XII, 27, 809 (Yudhishtira's reply to A. approving a life of yoga and austerities).—§ 632 (do.), XII, 29, (894), 897: A. asked Kṛṣṇa (who from his earliest years was dearer to Yudhishtira than even A. himself) to dispel Yudhishtira's grief.—§ 635 (do.), XII, 33, 1175; 37, 1377: Directed by Nārada to apply to Bhīṣma for instruction and exhorted by Jishnu (Arjuna), etc. (γ), Yudhishtira with his brothers, etc., headed by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, set out for Hāstinapura. The procession described (δ): A. held a white umbrella of great effulgence, etc., over his head. 38, 1396: The citizens welcomed Yudhishtira and Draupadī and A., etc. (ε). Yudhishtira entered the palace; the brahmins slew Cārvāka with their yells.—§ 637 (do.), XII, 40a, 1445: Bhīma and A. sat one on each side of Yudhishtira at his installation on the throne. 41β, [1479: A. was appointed to resist hostile forces and chastise the wicked]; 44δ, 1517, 1524 (obtained the palace of Duḥçāsana), 1530 (Çaurin and Sātyaki entered the palace of A.); 47, [1694 (Yudhishtira and A. went in one chariot to see Bhīṣma, together with Kṛṣṇa)].—[§ 638 (do.), XII, 48: Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas, etc., proceeded to Kurukshetra (description).]—§ 639 (do.), XII, [50: The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa, etc., descended from their chariots and approached and saluted the R., who surrounded Bhīṣma on his arrow-bed]. 52ε: [The Pāṇḍavas, etc., returned to Hāstinapura after having saluted Bhīṣma]; 53, [1910 (Yudhishtira asked A. to see that his chariot was made ready)], 1914 (the Pāṇḍavas proceeded towards Kṛṣṇa's abode; the princes set out to see Bhīṣma), [having come to Bhīṣma, they alighted from their chariots].—§ 640 (do.), XII, 54a, 1929 (the Pāṇḍavas asked Bhīṣma to discourse on morality).—§ 654 (Āpaddh.), XII, 167, 5874 ("the 18 akshauhīnis were not equal in might to the single-handed A.").—§ 657 (do.), XII, 167, (6220) (A. assigned precedence to Wealth, not to Virtue and Desire).—§ 717 (Nārāyaṇya), XII, 342, (13133), 13136, 13186: Vaiçampāyana related what Kṛṣṇa had said to A., when the latter asked him about the signification of his names mentioned by M.-r. in the Vedas and Purāṇas. 343, (13186), 13236, (13277): Asked by A.

about the identical origin of Agni and Soma, Kṛṣṇa (in prose) related some ancient stories about the gods, etc.; asked by A. about the battle between Rudra and Nārāyaṇa, Kṛṣṇa related some particulars thereof: "that being, whom, at the time of all the battles, thou beheldest stalking in thy van, is no other than Rudra . . . those foes whom thou hast slain, were all, in the first instance, slain by him." 349, 13554: When the Pāṇḍava and Kuru armies were drawn up for the battle and A. became distressed, Kṛṣṇa himself explained the religion of Devotion . . . Pārtha put that question to Nārada in the midst of R. and in the presence of Kṛṣṇa and Bhīṣma.—§ 734 (Ānuçāsanik.), XIII, 26, 1759: Bhīṣma had been overthrown in battle by A.; he was lying on a bed of arrows in expectation of the time of death; the Pāṇḍavas, etc., waited upon him, while he answered their questions relating to morality and righteousness.—§ 777 (Svargāroḥ. p.), XIII, 169a, 7771: When they burnt the corpse of Bhīṣma, Bhīmasena and A. held a couple of Yak-tails of pure white in their hands; then the Pāṇḍavas, etc., proceeded to Gaṅgā, where they offered oblations of water to Bhīṣma; Gaṅgā wept; Kṛṣṇa comforted her; he declared that Bhīṣma had not been slain by Çikhaṇḍin, but by A.—§ 781 (Açvamedh.), XIV, 15, 396, 399, 406: Asked by Janamejaya what Kṛṣṇa and A. did when the Pāṇḍavas had reconquered and pacified their kingdom, Vaiçampāyana said that Kṛṣṇa comforted A. for the death of his relatives (α) and then wished to go to Dvāravātī; A. sorrowfully assented.—§ 782 (Anugītāp.), XIV, 16, 407, 410: When Kṛṣṇa and A., after slaying the enemies, dwelt in the palace, A. asked Kṛṣṇa to repeat the contents [of the Bhagavadgītā], because he would soon repair to Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa was discontented that A. could not remember it; he now, however, recited what the brahman Kāçyapa had heard from a brahman crowned with ascetic success about Jīva (the individual Soul), etc. (i.e. Anugītā).—§ 782b (Brāhmanagītā), XIV, 34, (932): When Kṛṣṇa had finished the Brāhmanagītā, A. asked where that brāhmaṇī and that brahman were now; Kṛṣṇa said: "My mind (manas) is the brahman, my understanding (buddhi) is the brāhmaṇī; he who has been called kshetrājña, I am myself."—§ 782 (Anugītāp.), XIV, 35, (934): Asked by A. about Brāhman, Kṛṣṇa recited the old history about the discourse between the preceptor and his disciple on this subject (Gururçishyasamvāda). 51, (1470): Asked by A., Kṛṣṇa said that he was the preceptor and the mind his pupil; "I wish to see my father again with thy leave"; A. replied: "We shall go to-day from this town to Hāstinapura and inform Yudhishtira."—§ 783 (do.), XIV, 52: Kṛṣṇa and A. set out for Hāstinapura; A. praised Kṛṣṇa, "the soul of the universe, etc."; they saw Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (γ); Kṛṣṇa passed the night in the apartment of A.; at morning they proceeded to Yudhishtira; then they set out from Hāstinapura with Subhadrā, etc.; A. returned.—§ 784 (do.), XIV, 53: A. repeatedly embraced Kṛṣṇa; as he came upon the desert he beheld Utanka.—§ 785 (do.), XIV, 62: Vyāsa came and predicted to Pṛthā, Uttarā, A., and Yudhishtira that the son of Uttarā would become a great prince through the puissance of Kṛṣṇa and Vyāsa; A. became comforted. 63, 1874, 1887: Yudhishtira summoned all his brothers, and spoke to them about performing the horse-sacrifice, and about obtaining the wealth of Marutta; Bhīmasena proposed to worship Çiva; A., etc., approved. 64: The Pāṇḍavas, etc., set out for the gold of Marutta. 65: They made offerings to Īiva, etc.; then they again set out for Hāstinapura. 66: Meanwhile Kṛṣṇa, etc., arrived; Uttarā gave birth to Parikshit, who was still-born. 67, 1969: Subhadṛā lamented (ν). 68: Kṛṣṇa entered the lying-in-room (description). 69: Kṛṣṇa touched water and withdrew the Brāhma-weapon and revived the child. 70: When Parikshit was a month old, the Pāṇḍavas came back with the wealth. 71, 2081: A., etc. (ρ), would officiate at Yudhishtira's sacrifice. 72, 2105: According to the counsel of Vyāsa, A. was charged with the protection of the horse. 73, 2115, 2139: Yudhishtira asked A. to spare all hostile kings as much as possible and to invite them to the horse-sacrifice; A. with the Gāṇḍīva followed the horse; all Hāstinapura came out to see him; a disciple of Yājñavalkya followed him in order to perform auspicious rites for him, and also many brahmins and kṣatriyas. In course of the horse's wandering many great and wonderful battles were fought. The horse wandered over the whole earth; from the North it turned to the East; myriads of kings fought with A., because they had lost their kinsmen on the field of Kurukṣetra, the same did innumerable Kīrātas, Yavanas, Mlecchas, and Āryas. 74: The Trigartas attacked A., who in vain asked them to forbear; the Trigarta king Sūryavarman fought with A., who slew his younger brother Ketuvarman; then he fought Dhṛtarāṣṭra, was wounded in his hand and dropped the Gāṇḍīva, but took it up again and slew eighteen warriors; the Trigartas fled and accepted A.'s dominion. 75, 2188, 2190: In Prāgyotisha, Bhagadatta's son king Vajradatta (description) attacked A. on his elephant, but, after a fierce battle—76, 2195, 2197, 2207, 2208, 2209—during three days, he on the fourth day had his elephant slain, and promised to come to the horse-sacrifice. 77: The Saindhavas seated on chariots attacked A., who was on foot, recollecting Jayadratha; omens appeared; the Gāṇḍīva fell down; the gods, etc., shouted "victory" to A., who once more used his bow; the Saindhavas fled. 78, 2265, 2273, 2280: The Saindhavas once more rallied; A. urged them to surrender, but in vain; then Duḥṣalā, taking her grandson, the son of Suratha, in her arms, repaired to A.; A. cast off his bow, and asked after Suratha (the son of Jayadratha); she said that he had died from sorrow when he heard of A.'s arrival; A. comforted her; Duḥṣalā asked her warriors to desist, and returned home; at last the horse arrived at Manipūra—79, 2338—where Babhruvāhana, A.'s son by Citrāṅgadā, approached A. with humility; A. angrily blamed him for having fallen away from kṣatriya duties. Ulūpi pierced through the earth and beheld her [step-]son standing distressed, and incited him to fight A., which he did; he even caused the sacrificial horse to be seized; gravely wounded, A. praised his son highly; at last A. fell down in a swoon, and so did Babhruvāhana. 80, 2371: Citrāṅgadā lamented. At last Ulūpi thought of the gem that has the virtue of reviving a dead man; the gem came; she placed it on the breast of A.; he revived. 81, (2402): Asked by A., Ulūpi recited the curse of the Vāsu for A.'s having slain Bhīṣma in unfair fight; if A. had died without having expiated his sin, he would have fallen into Hell; A. highly approved of her deed and told Babhruvāhana to come with his mother, etc., to the horse-sacrifice; Babhruvāhana promised to come and to take upon himself the task of distributing food among the brahmins. He asked A. to pass the night in the city with his two wives; but A. was prevented by his vow of following the horse. 82, 2456, 2462: The horse at last turned its face towards Hāstinapura; at Rājagṛha, the Magadha king Meghasandhi, the son of Sahadeva, mounted on his chariot, attacked A., who was on foot; he was told to come to the horse-sacrifice. In Vaṅga, Puṇḍra, and Koṣala A. vanquished innumerable Mleccha armies. 83: A. proceeded towards the south. At the beautiful city of the Cedis, Ārabha, the son of Īcupāla, fought A. and then worshipped him, etc. Citrāṅgada was vanquished by A.; the Nishāda king, the son of Ekalavya, was vanquished after a furious battle, etc. King Ugrasena came to A. with Vasudeva. Then along the coast of the western ocean; then to the Gāṇḍhāras, where a fierce battle ensued with the Gāṇḍhāra king, the son of Ākuni. 84, 2491: At last the king, disregarding A.'s peaceful advice, fought alone; A. shot off his headgear; the mother of the king came out and forbade her son to fight; A. told him to come to the horse-sacrifice. 85, 2511: At the news of his arrival to Hāstinapura, Yudhishtira rejoiced, etc., and made magnificent preparations for the sacrifice. 86, 2559: Kṛṣṇa, etc., came and told about A. that he had been very much emaciated, and that he was near at hand. 87, 2587, 2592, 2593: Yudhishtira enquired of Kṛṣṇa why A. was fated to bear such hardships in life; Kṛṣṇa attributed it to the elevation of A.'s cheekbones. Bhīmasena, etc., became gratified with A.'s triumphs. A messenger announced the arrival of A., and received large gifts. On the second day A. entered the city (description). A. saluted Yudhishtira, etc. 88: The sacrifice was duly performed; 89, 2655.—§ 786 (do.), XIV, 91, 2814: "Yudhishtira, Bhīma, and A. resembled Indra." —§ 787 (Ācramavāsap.), XV, 1: For fifteen years the Pāṇḍavas did everything under the advice of Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Bhīmasena alone did not forget his grievances. 2: From fear of Yudhishtira nobody dared to speak evil of Duryodhana or Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhīma, however, revered the old king outwardly, but with a very unwilling heart. 3: After fifteen years Dhṛtarāṣṭra, afflicted by the cutting words of Bhīma, asked Yudhishtira's permission for himself and Gāṇḍhārī to retire to the woods clad in rags and barks in order to practise austerities; 10, 333, 346. 11: Yudhishtira and A. applauded Dhṛtarāṣṭra's intention to perform the ṛddha of Bhīṣma, etc., before setting out for the woods; Bhīma was unwilling; A. sought to pacify him, seconded by Yudhishtira. 12, (382), 387, 392: A. urged Bhīma to forget the injuries of Duryodhana. 13, 403: Vidura reported the speeches of Yudhishtira, A., and Bhīma to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. 15, 434: When Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāṇḍhārī set out with his daughters-in-law on the day of full-moon in the month of Kārttika, Yudhishtira and A. were filled with grief. 16, 455: Vidura and Sañjaya and Kuntī retired with Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāṇḍhārī into the woods; Dhṛtarāṣṭra caused Kṛpa and Yuyutsu to remain and made them over to Yudhishtira.—§ 788 (do.), XV, 22: Afflicted with grief, the Pāṇḍavas did not attend to their kingly offices; they set their heart upon seeing Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc., and proceeded towards the forest. 23, 618, 628: Headed by A. (on a chariot with white horses) and Kṛpa, they proceeded slowly (description of the expedition). 24, 646: Sahadeva and Kuntī informed Gāṇḍhārī of the arrival of the Pāṇḍavas, and then advanced towards A., etc. (β), dragging the childless old couple. 25, 658, 662: To the ascetics who had come from diverse regions to see the Pāṇḍavas, Sañjaya pointed out each of them (†γ). 26: Vidura entered the body of Yudhishtira, but was not cremated; 28, 747 (ε).—§ 789 (Putradarṣanap.), XV, 29: The Pāṇḍavas passed about a month in that forest; Vyāsa came; Dhṛtarāshṭra wished to see his dead children and kinsmen; the grief of Gāndhārī, etc. (δ), was revived; she said that for sixteen years Dhṛtarāshṭra never slept for grief; and also Kṛṣṇā, etc. (ε), grieved exceedingly; asked by Vyāsa to tell what she wished—30—Kuntī told the story of Karna's birth; Vyāsa promised to show her Karna. 31: They all proceeded towards the Bhāgīrathī, and waited for the advent of night; at sunset they bathed and finished their evening rites. 32: When night came, Vyāsa plunged into the Bhāgīrathī for a bath and summoned all the deceased warriors, who all rose up from the water with a loud uproar. 33: When they had sported with one another for that night, Vyāsa dismissed them within the twinkling of an eye.—§ 791 (do.), XV, 36, 1004 (β): Dhṛtarāshṭra became released from his grief; all returned home; the Pāṇḍavas had passed more than a month in the wood.—§ 792 (Nāradaḡamanap.), XV, 37-39: Two years later the Pāṇḍavas were visited by Nārada, who told them that Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., had been burnt by a forest conflagration; only Sañjaya had escaped. The Pāṇḍavas and the citizens all proceeded to Gaṅgā in order to offer oblations of water to them, etc.—§ 793 (Mausalap.), XVI, 4, †107: After the mutual slaughter at Dvārakā, Kṛṣṇa sent Dārūka to inform A. and tell him to come quickly; Kṛṣṇa, entering Dvāravatī, told his father to protect the ladies till A. came. Bala-Rāma and Kṛṣṇa died. 5, 135, 138: A. with Dārūka proceeded to Dvārakā; when Kṛṣṇa's 16,000 wives saw A., they uttered a loud cry. The city seemed to A. to be like the terrible river Vaitaraṇī. A., Satyā, and Rukmiṇī fell down and weiled; then praising Kṛṣṇa and comforting the ladies, A. went to Vasudeva. 6, 151, 153, 154, 157, 169: Vasudeva lamented and said he would die by abstaining from food. 7, 183, 224, 227, 230, 253: A. said that the hour had come also for the Pāṇḍavas to depart [from the world] (λ); he would, however, first move the women, the children, and the aged of the Vṛṣṇis to Indraprastha. Then he entered the hall of the Yādavas called Sudharmā (sudharmāṃ yādavīm sabhām), where he told the citizens and ministers that he would take away with him the remnants of the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas, as the sea would soon engulf the city, etc. A. passed that night in the mansion of Kṛṣṇa. At dawn Vasudeva by yoga attained to the highest goal; his four wives ascended the funeral pyre. When A. had caused Vasudeva and his four wives to be burnt, he visited the place where the Vṛṣṇis had been slaughtered, and caused the last rites to be performed and Rāma and Kṛṣṇa to be burnt. On the seventh day he set out with the ladies and children, the Yādava troops and other inhabitants, with Kṛṣṇa's 16,000 wives, and Vajra; they numbered many millions in all; then the ocean flooded Dvārakā; they proceeded in slow marches; at Pañcanada the Ābhīras (Mlecchas) conspired to rob the cavalcade. A. only with great difficulty succeeded in stringing his bow. His celestial weapons would not come to his mind; the women were snatched away by the robbers; A.'s shafts soon became exhausted; formerly they had been inexhaustible. A. became very distressed; he escorted the remnant of the cavalcade to Kurukshetra; he established the son of Kṛtavarma in the city of Mārttikāvata with the remnant of the women of the Bhoja king; the remainder, with children and old men and women, at Indraprastha with Vajra for their ruler; the son of Yuyudhāna (with old men, etc.) on the banks of the Sarasvatī, etc.; then A. entered the retreat of Vyāsa. 8, 254, 255, (261): A. informed Vyāsa of what had passed (ν) ("500,000 warriors have thus been laid down"). Vyāsa said that Kṛṣṇa, as also the Pāṇḍavas, had finished their work; "the time has come for your departure from this world," etc. (ξ). A. entered Hāstinapura and informed Yudhisṭhira of what had taken place.—§ 794 (Mahāprasthān.), XVII, 1, 2, 5, 20, 31, 37, 38: The Pāṇḍavas set their heart on leaving the world; the kingdom was made over to Yuyutsu, and Parikshit installed as king in Hāstinapura, while Vajra ruled in Indraprastha. Kṛṣṇa was installed as the preceptor of Parikshit. The subjects tried in vain to dissuade them; they and Draupadī divested themselves of their ornaments and dressed in the barks of trees; then they threw their sacred fires into the water. Then they set out on their journey: the five Pāṇḍavas, Draupadī, and a dog; wandering towards the east they reached the sea of red water. Agni came (α) and caused A. to throw the Gāṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quiver into the water and thus restore them to Varuṇa. They now proceeded towards the south, etc., wishing to make a round of the whole earth. 2, 67: Having crossed Himavat, etc., Kṛṣṇa dropped down, in consequence of her partiality for A.; then Sahadeva, then Nakula, then A. fell down; A., because he had said that he would consume all the foes in a single day, but had not accomplished it. 3, 92: Yudhisṭhira's second test.—§ 795 (Svargārohanap.), XVIII, 1-3: Yudhisṭhira's third test: 2, 36, 66. 4, [128: When arrived in heaven Yudhisṭhira saw there Govinda (Kṛṣṇa) in his Brāhman-form (description), adored by Phālguna (Arjuna)].—Of the following synonyms:—

Arjuna², a ṛshi in the palace of Yama. § 267 (Yamasubhāv.): II, 8, 328.

Arjunābhigamanaparvan. § 317: Hearing that the Pāṇḍavas had been banished, the Bhojas, Vṛshnis, Andhakas, the heirs of Pañḍala, the Codī king Dhṛṣṭaketu, the brothers Kaikya went to see them. As Kṛṣṇa (ḁ) said: "the earth shall drink the blood of Duryodhana, etc." Arjuna tried to pacify him by reciting the feats achieved in his former lives (ḁ); then Arjuna, the soul of Kṛṣṇa, became silent, and Jandardana (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) (ḁ) replied that he was identical with Arjuna. Then Pañḍali (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), surrounded by Dhṛṣṭadyumna and her other brothers, praised Kṛṣṇa (ḁ). She then blamed him and the Pāṇḍavas for having let her endure the shame of being dragged in the assembly, etc.

("lie on that Gāṇḍīva (o)"), and relates the persecutions of Duryodhana (cf. § 197) and the valour of Bhīma until the svayamvara. Kṛṣṇa promised that she should be avenged, and Dhṛṣṭadyumna said: "I will slay Droṇa; Çikhaṇḍin Pitāmaha (i.e. Bhīshma); Bhīmasena Duryodhana; and Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) Karna; assisted by Rāma and Kṛṣṇa we are invincible in battle even to Indra" (III, 12).

—§ 318: Kṛṣṇa said that if he had not been absent from Dvārakā (v. 610: the Anarita country) at that time, he should have come and prevented the gambling by either persuading Dhṛtarāṣṭra (relating how the son of Vīrasena was formerly deprived of his kingdom, etc.), or compelling him by force; on arriving at Dvārakā he had learnt from Yuyudhāna what had happened and had instantly come to see them (III, 13). —§§ 319–321: Saubhavadhop. (q.v.). —§§ 322–324: Dvaita-vanapravoça (q.v.). —§§ 325–327: Draupadī-paritāpa-vākya (q.v.). —§§ 328–329: Kāmyakavana-pravoça (q.v.). —§ 330: Indradarçana (q.v.). Arjunavanavāsaparvan ("the section relating to Arjuna's dwelling in the wood," the 16th of the minor parvas of Mbh.). § 247: The Pāṇḍavas continued to reside there, and by their prowess they brought many kings under their sway, and on account of their virtue the whole race of the Kurus grew in prosperity. After some time robbers lifted the cattle of a brahman, who then repaired to Khaṇḍava-prastha and reproved the Pāṇḍavas. Arjuna heard it; but the chamber where the Pāṇḍavas had their weapons being then occupied by Yudhisṭhira with Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna was obliged to violate the established rule by entering the chamber. Then, armed with the bow and attired in mail and riding on his war-chariot decked with flagstaves, he pursued the thieves and compelled them to give up the booty. Then, notwithstanding Yudhisṭhira's objections, he went to the forest to live there for twelve years (I, 213). —§ 248: Arjuna set out followed by brahmanas conversant with the vedas and vedāṅgas and devoted to the contemplation of the Supreme Spirit (adhyātmacintakāḥ), by mendicants (bhāikṣhāḥ) devoted to Bhagavat (Bhagavadbhaktāḥ), by reciters of the Purāṇas (sūtāḥ Paurāṇikāḥ), and by reciters of sacred stories (divyākhyānāḥ), etc., and settled at Gāṅgādvara, where the brahmanas performed innumerable agnihotras. One day when Arjuna had performed his ablutions in the Gāṅgā, and offered the oblations of water to his deceased ancestors, and when he was about to rise up from the stream desirous of performing his sacrificial rites before the fire, he was drawn away to the bottom of the water by Ulupi, the daughter of the Nāga king Kauravya of the lineage of Airavata, urged by the god of desire. There he saw a sacrificial fire, where he performed his sacrificial rites, by which Agni was much gratified. Ulupi persuaded him that it was a greater merit to give himself up to her than to keep the vow of a brahmacharin, and having spent the night there, he in the morning, accompanied by Ulupi, came back to Gaṅgādvara. Ulupi, taking leave of him there, said that he would be invincible in water (I, 214).—§ 249: Then he set out towards the Himavat and came to Agastyavata and the mountain of Vasishṭha; in Bhṛgutuṅga he bestowed many thousands of kine, etc., on brahmins and visited many tirthas (especially all those in Āṅga, Vaṅga, and Kalinga). At the gate of the kingdom of Kalinga the brahmins desisted from following him further; he crossed Kalinga, beheld the Mahendra mountain adorned with the ascetics, and went to Manipūra, proceeding slowly along the seashore. There he married Citrāṅgadā, the daughter of king Citravāhana (b), and dwelt there for three years. When Citrāṅgadā had given birth to a son, Arjuna set out on his wanderings again (I, 215).—§ 250: Then Arjuna went to the tirthas at the southern ocean. There five tirthas were shunned on account of five crocodiles that seized the devotees: Agastyatirtha, Saubhadra, Pauloma, Kārandhama (giving the results of a horse-sacrifice), and Bhāradvāja's tirtha. Arjuna plunged into the Saubhadra (so called after a maharshi), and was seized by a crocodile, which he dragged to the shore. It then became the apsaras Vargā, the friend of Dhanapati (Kubera). When she with her four companions (Saurabhoyī, Samteti, Vudvudā, and Latā), going to the abode of Kubera, had in vain tempted an ascetic brahman, that brahman had cursed them, saying that they should become crocodiles for 100 years (I, 216). Vargā said: "As we asked the rshi to grant us pardon, he said: '100 and 100,000 are all indicative of eternity; but the words 100 as employed by me is to be understood as a limited period; you will be delivered by an exalted individual, and those waters shall become sacred and purifying under the name of Nāritīrtkāni.' The devarshi Nārada directed us to these lakes, and said that Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) would soon deliver us." Arjuna then also delivered the other four apsaras. Then he proceeded to Manipūra to see Citrāṅgadā; with her he had begotten king Babhruvāhana. Then he proceeded towards Gokarna (I, 217).—§ 251: Then Arjuna visited the tirthas on the shores of the western ocean, and arrived at Prabhāsa. There Madhusūdana (= Kṛṣṇa) visited him, and he and Arjuna, who were the rshis Nara and Nārāyaṇa, sported there for some time. Then they went to the Raivataka mountain, after Kṛṣṇa had caused this mountain to be well adorned by many artifices; there he saw the performances of the actors and the dancers. The next morning they set out for Dvārakā, welcomed by the Bhojas, Vṛṣṇis, and Andhakas. There he dwelt in the mansion of Kṛṣṇa for many days (I, 218).

A drought occurred extending for twelve years; the Ṛ., having made an asylum for themselves, continued to live there in a forest of Himavat. Seeing Arundhatī devoted to penances, Çiva in the form of a brahman came to her and asked for alms, and, as her store of food was exhausted, he told her to cook jujubes. While she listened to his discourses and cooked, without food, that twelve years' drought passed away to her as if it were a single day. Then the seven Ṛ. returned; Mahādeva, in his own form, said that the ascetic merit of Arundhatī was much greater than theirs, and granted her the boon that this spot should become an excellent tīrtha named Badarapācana, resorted to by Si. and D.-ṛ., and that he who observes a fast there and resides there for three nights after having cleansed himself should obtain the benefit of a twelve years' fast. Then he repaired to heaven. Ṛ. wondered at the sight of the god and because Arundhatī was unfatigued and still possessed the hue of health: 2795, 2798, 2805, 2810, 2814, 2815, 2818.—§ 707 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 318, 11711 (one who, having previously seen [the star] A., fails to see it . . . has but one year left to live).—§ 750 (Bisastainyop.): XIII, 93, 4416, (4445), 4455, 4460, (4497), (4528).—§ 751 (Çapathavidhi): XIII, 94a, β, 4551, (4584).—§ 764 (Ānuṣāsan.): XIII, 123, 5877 (*Arundhatīva . . . Aṣṭāvakra², a tīrtha. § 733 (Ānuçāsan.): XIII, 25, 1727: Bhishma mentioned the profit of bathing in A., etc.

[Aṣṭāvakra-Dik-saṃvāda(h)] ("discourse between Aṣṭāvakra and the goddess of the North"). § 731b (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 19 ff.: Bhishma said: In days of yore Aṣṭāvakra (of severe penances) asked R. Vādānya for his beautiful daughter Suprabhā. Vādānya first caused him to make a journey to the North, indicating the road: (1) Himavat (peopled by Si. and Cā.); (2) the sacred river Bahudā, where he bathed in one of the tīrthas, etc. (description), and worshipped Rudra and Umā; (3) Kailāsa, where he saw a golden gate, etc. (a), and was honoured by Kubera among Y. (with Maṇibhadra, G., and K., and where Aps. (β) danced; there he remained a celestial year; (4) having crossed Kailāsa and Mandara as also the golden mountains, he came to the region where Mahādeva resides attired as an ascetic, Pārshadas of which are frolicsome and fond of dance and possessed of faces of diverse forms, which was peopled by Si., Cā., and Pç., where Umā had practised austerities for the sake of [obtaining] Çiva; where, in days of yore, on the Mahāpārçya [mountain] (to the north of the god) the Seasons, etc. (a'), in their material forms had adored Mahādeva; (5) a beautiful forest (description), where the river Mandākinī was seen, with an old and decrepit female ascetic (with many beautiful maidens), who in vain tempted him with love (XIII, 19), at last appearing in a beautiful form (XIII, 20). She turned out to be the goddess of the North (Uttarāṃ diçam), who, having been gratified by R. Vādānya, had devised this trial and now instructed him, showing him the levity of women, even when aged; "thou hast subjugated all the worlds by thy strength of mind; thy journey back will not be irksome; thou wilt obtain the wife thou hast chosen;

she will bear thee a son." Aṣṭāvakra came back to his own abode, and then to Vādānya, who wedded him to the girl. There he continued to dwell joyously in his own hermitage (XIII, 21).

Aṣṭāvakra³ (m) ("episode relating to Aṣṭāvakra").

—§ 51 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 449: A. atraiva vīrado yatra Bandinā, etc.—§ 412 (Tīrthay.): III, 132 ff.: Uddālaka gave his own daughter Sujātā in marriage, together with sacred learning (çrutam), to his disciple the brahman Kahoda, who had served him long. The embryo in her womb had become versed in the Çāstras and the Vedas with the aṅgas, and blamed Kahoda, who had been reading the whole night. The great rahi Kahoda cursed him to become crooked on eight parts of his body, wherefore he, when born, was called Aṣṭāvakra. In order to procure wealth for Sujātā, Kahoda went to king Janaka (son of Indradymna, v. 133, 10624), where he was defeated in a controversy with the sūta (v. 10613, etc., sūtaputram v. 10671) Bandin and was immersed into water. Uddālaka prevailed upon Sujātā to keep it a secret from Aṣṭāvakra, who regarded Uddālaka as his father and Çvetaketu, the son of Uddālaka, who was of the same age with himself, as his brother, until in his 12th year Çvetaketu in anger happened to disclose the matter to him. He and Çvetaketu then went to the sacrifice of Janaka, and on being driven from the entrance Aṣṭāvakra met the king (III, 132), and in the course of a conversation with him and the doorkeeper he compared Janaka to Yayāti, and said that he had heard that Bandin caused those whom he had vanquished in disputation to be drowned in the sea by men sent by Janaka, and he declared that he had come to maintain the unity with Brāhman (Brāhmādevaitam) and to defeat Bandin, then he answered several enigmatical questions (about the wheel of Time, the thunder and lightning, the fish, egg, stone, and river) and was admitted (III, 133). Here they disputed in such a way that Bandin enumerated things of which there is only 1 (fire, Sun, Indra, and Yama), Aṣṭāvakra groups of 2 (Indra and Agni, 2 devarehis: Nārada and Parvata, 2 Açvins, 2 wheels of a chariot; husband and wife), Ba° of 3 (3 times the creatures are born, etc.; see Nil.), A° of 4 (4 are the āçramas of the brahmanas; 4 orders perform this sacrifice (!), etc.), Ba° of 5 (5 fires, etc.), A° of 6 (6 cows, it is asserted by some, are the dakṣhiṇā for establishing the sacred fire, "adhāne," etc.), Ba° of 7 (7 domesticated animals, 7 wild animals, etc.), A° of 8 (8 çāpas make a çatamāna, see BR., 8 are the legs of the çarabha, etc.), Ba° of 9 (9 are the sāmidhant verses for the Pitṛs, etc.), A° of 10 (10 are the cardinal points, etc.), Ba° of 11 (11 are the ekādāśinas of the creatures, see Nil., 11 are there the yūpas, etc.), A° of 12 (12 months, etc.). As Bandin had said the first half-çloka with 13 (the 13th tīthi is deemed most auspicious, 13 are the islands of the earth), he stopped, and Aṣṭāvakra fulfilled the çloka. Bandin was then deemed to be vanquished, and at the request of Aṣṭāvakra he merged into the sea, after he had declared himself to be the son of Varuṇa and that he had caused the brahmanas to be drowned in order that they might see the twelve years sattra of Varuṇa that was performed simultaneously with that of Janaka. They at once reappeared, and Kahoda let Aṣṭāvakra bathe in the river Samāṅga, and all his limbs were immediately made straight, and the Samāṅga became a remover of sin. "Therefore you also should bathe there" (III, 134).

(B.; C. has yoshitam), 2922 (A.): In Ādityatīrtha R. A.D. lived in days of yore, observant of the duties of a householder (description); he always practised the vow of brahmacharya. Once the ascetic mendicant (bhikṣhukah)

Jaigishavya, devoted to yoga, came to Devala's hermitage and attained to success (siddhim). Devala always kept his eyes on him. After a long time, Devala on one occasion lost sight of Jaigishavya; at the hour of dinner, however, he approached Devala in order to solicit alms, and D. worshipped him, after the rites laid down by R., for many years; but Jaigishavya never spoke a single word to him. D. proceeded to the shore of the ocean, journeying through the welkin and bearing his earthen jug with him; there he saw Jaigishavya, who had arrived there before him, at which M.-r. A. wondered much. Having finished his ablutions and silent prayers, D. returned to his hermitage, bearing with him his earthen vessel filled with water. Entering his own hermitage, he saw Jaigishavya seated there. D. then soared aloft into the sky in order to ascertain who Jaigishavya really was. He saw crowds of sky-ranging Si. rapt in meditation, and he saw Jaigishavya, reverentially worshipped by them, and he became filled with wonder at the sight. He saw Jaigishavya set out for the Pitrloka > Yāmyaloka, etc. (μ). At last he was seen to pass into the regions of the brahmasattvins, then through three other regions to those of chaste women and such as are devoted to their husbands. At this point A. lost sight of him, and enquiring of the foremost of Si. in the regions of the brahmasattvins, he was told that Jaigishavya had gone to the eternal region (loka) of Brahman. A. endeavoured to soar aloft; but he soon fell down, and the Si. declared that he was not worthy to proceed thither. D. came down, descending from one region to another in due order, to his hermitage, where he again beheld Jaigishavya, who taught him the religion of Emancipation (moksha) and the ordinances of yoga, etc., and performed all the acts according to the rites for that end. Then all creatures with P. began to weep, saying, "Who will henceforth give us food?" D. then thought of renouncing the religion of moksha; then all kinds of fruits and roots, etc., began to weep, saying, "The wicked-hearted D. will once more pluck and eat us, having once assured all creatures of his perfect harmlessness." Then D. abandoned the religion of a householder and adopted that of moksha, and obtained the highest success (siddhi) and the highest yoga. D. with Brh. applauded Jaigishavya; only Nārada contradicted.—§ 621 (Rājadh.): XII, 1, 34 (D.).—§ 637 (do.): XII, 47, 1594 (A.).—§ 664 (Mokshadh.): XII, 207β, 7521 (A.D.).—§ 675 (do.): XII, 230, 8431 (A.), 8432 (A.D.), (8433) (D.), 8436 (D.), 8439 (D.).—§ 688 (do.): XII, 276, 9874 (A.D.), 9875 (D.), (9877) (A.).—§ 702 (do.): XII, 293a, 10761 (A.D.).—§ 707 (do.): XII, 319, 11742 (D.); β, 11782 (A.D.).—§ 730 (Ānuṣāsan.): XIII, 18xx, 1313 (A.D.).—§ 746 (do.): XIII, 66ξ, 3332 (A.D.).—§ 768 (do.): XIII, 139a, 6298 (D.).—§ 775 (do.): XIII, 166ξ, 7671 (D.).—§ 777 (Svargā-rohanika p.): XIII, 168, 7718 (A.D.); 169β, 7778 (A.).—§ 783 (Anugītāp.): XIV, 52a, 1492 (D.).—§ 786 (do.): XIV, 91a, 2843 (A.).—§ 787 (Ācramavāsap.): XV, 20ββ, 538 (D.).—§ 789 (Putradarṣanap.): XV, 29a, 774 (D.).—§ 795 (Mahābhārata): XVIII, 5c, 199 (A° D° aṣ Pitṛn aṣṛārayat).

XVIII, 6, 266: "When the Ā. is being recited, [brahmins] should be entertained with fruits and roots, and frumenty, and honey and clarified butter, and rice boiled with raw sugar (guḍandanam)."

Āstika(ṃ) ākhyāna(ṃ) ("the story of Āstika, cf. Āstika-parvan): I, 13, 1023, 1027; 15, 1068; 16, 1072; 58, 2194, 2197.

[Āstika-parvan(°va)], the 5th of the minor parvans. § 26: I, 13-15: Sauti related how the ascetic Jaratkāru (q.v.), upon a woman, likewise-named Jaratkāru, being the sister of the Serpent-king Vāsuki, begot a son (Āstika) destined to neutralize the curse inflicted on the Serpents by their mother (Kadrū).—§ 27 (Kācya): I, 16: Origin of the Serpents and of Garuḍa and Aruṇa.—§ 28 (Amṛtamanthana): I, 17-19: In order to explain the origin of Uccaiḥgravaṇa, Sauti related the churning of the Ocean and the consequent production of the Amṛta, etc.—§§ 29-46 (Kadrū, Samudra, Samudradarṣana, Garuḍa, Aruṇa, Indra, Rāmanīyaka, Supratika, and Vālikhilya): I, 20-34: Kadrū and Vinatā made a bet as to the colour of the tail of Uccaiḥgravaṇa, and Vinatā (having been cursed by Aruṇa, § 27) became the slave of Kadrū; Kadrū cursed the Serpents, her sons, to be burnt at the Snake-sacrifice of Janamejaya; exploits of Garuḍa; Aruṇa became the charioteer of the Sun; Garuḍa set out to bring the Amṛta to the Snakes, who had promised that he and his mother should on this condition be freed from bondage; Vibhāvasu and Supratika, and Garuḍa's meeting with the Vālikhilyas; omens foreboding fear (of losing the Amṛta) appeared among the gods, owing to Indra's having formerly been cursed by the Vālikhilyas; Garuḍa snatched the Amṛta, made friendship with Viśhnu and Indra, and placed the Amṛta before the Snakes, who declared Vinatā to be free; but Indra took it from them.—§ 47: I, 35: Enumeration of the principal Snakes.—§ 48: Ōsha (q.v.).—§ 49: Consultation of the Serpents under Vāsuki (q.v.); it became known that Āstika would be born and save the harmless serpents.—§ 50: Etymology of Jaratkāru.—§ 51: King Parikshit (q.v.), the son of Abhimanyu, was cursed and consequently struck to death by Takshaka; Kācya was bribed to return without curing him.—§ 52: Janamejaya (q.v.) succeeded his father Parikshit.—§ 53: The story of Jaratkāru repeated (see § 26) and somewhat enlarged.—§ 54: Jaratkāru (q.v.) left his wife.—§ 55: Āstika (q.v.) was born, and reared by Vāsuki.—§ 56: The ministers of Janamejaya told him about Parikshit (q.v.).—§ 57: The ministers of Janamejaya (q.v.) learned what had happened between Takshaka and Kācya. Janamejaya resolved to avenge his father and Utanka.—§ 58: Janamejaya (q.v.) made preparations for a Snake-sacrifice.—§§ 58b-69 (Sarpasattra): Janamejaya's Snake-sacrifice (cf. also Āstika); enumeration of the principal Snakes that fell into the fire, of Vāsuki's (§ 63), Takshaka's (§ 64), Airāvata's (§ 65), Kauravya's (§ 66) and Dhṛtarāṣṭra's race (§ 67). § 69: Sauti said. "This story I have told, as Pramaṇi narrated it to Ruru, after having heard what was said by the ḍuṇḍubha."

Astradarṣana ("the show of arms"). § 208 (Sambhav.): I, 134: When the princes had become accomplished in arms Droṇa addressed Dhṛtarāṣṭra in the presence of Kṛpa, Somadatta, Baklika, Bhishma, Vyāsa, and Vidura, asking him to let them show their proficiency. Vidura then let Droṇa measure out a place, and Kuntī, Gandhārī, etc. ("like celestial ladies ascending Mṛu"), and the citizens came out to behold the princes' skill. Droṇa and Aśvatthāman appeared like the Moon (Amṇumat) accompanied by the planet Mars (Angāraka). The spectators, seeing the prowess of the princes, fancied they were beholding the city of the Gandharvas. Vidura described all the feats of the princes to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and Kuntī to Gandhārī (I, 134). A combat with maces between Duryodhana and Bhīma divided the spectators into two parties, until Droṇa caused Aśvatthāman to separate them. The exploits of Arjuna (ś) were quite wonderful. Droṇa stood surrounded by the five Pārikas like the Moon in conjunction with the five-starred Savitra (i.e. Hasta), and Duryodhana, mace in hand, surrounded by his 100 brothers and Aśvatthāman, was like Purandara (i.e. Indra) encircled by the hosts of gods on the occasion of the victory over the Dānavas (I, 135). Karna (e) enters and challenges Arjuna. The Dhṛtarāṣṭras stood by Karna, while Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Bhishma remained with Arjuna. Kuntī swooned away, and was restored to consciousness by Vidura, who caused sandal paste and water to be sprinkled on her person. Kṛpa rejects Karna; but Duryodhana then installed Karna as king of Anga (I, 136). The sun went down; Duryodhana led Karna out of the arena, and the Pāṇḍavas, accompanied by Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Bhishma, returned to their abodes (I, 137).

Aurovākhyāna(m) ("the episode relating to Aurva"). § 227 (Parācāra): King Kṛtavīrya, the yāya of the Bhṛgu, at the end of the Soma sacrifice gratified the brahmins with large offerings. After he had ascended to heaven, it came to happen that his descendants were in want of wealth. Knowing that the Bhṛgu were rich, they went to them and begged. Some amongst the Bhṛgu buried their wealth under the earth, some gave it away to brahmins, and some duly gave it to the kshatriyas. Some kshatriyas, while digging at the house of a Bhārgava, came upon a large treasure. The kshatriyas then began to kill the Bhṛgu with their arrows all over the earth, even the embryos. A Bhṛgu woman fled to Himavat, holding an embryo in one of her thighs ("for 100 years," v. 6822). From fear a brahman woman reported this to the kshatriyas. The kshatriyas then went to destroy that embryo, which, however, came out, tearing open the thigh and dazzling the eyes of the kshatriyas so that they lost their sight. They asked the woman that they might be restored to sight, promising to abstain from their sinful practice (I, 178). She told them to ask the child, which they did, and regaining their eyesights they went away. The child (viprarakṣi) was named Aurva, because he had been born after tearing open his mother's thigh (aru). Aurva devoted himself to the austere of penances with the object of destroying the whole world to gratify his ancestors. The Pitṛs then all came from Pitṛloka, and said: "Be propitious towards the three worlds. Having grown weary with the long periods of life allotted to us, we desired our own destruction through the kshatriyas. Such as commit suicide never attain to regions that are blessed, therefore we abstained from self-destruction" (I, 179). When Aurva replied that his vow must not be in vain, the Pitṛs prevailed upon him to throw his wrath into the waters of the ocean, the whole universe being made of water. It became a large horse-head, which, emitting fire from its mouth, consumes the waters of the ocean (I, 180).—§ 228: Hearing this the viprarakṣi Parācāra controlled his wrath from destroying the worlds. But he performed a great rākṣasa sacrifice and began to burn the rākṣasas in it, and Vasishṭha did not restrain him. Desirous of ending that sacrifice the ṛṣi Atri came to that place, and also Pulastya and Pulaha and Kratu, desiring to save the rākṣasas. Seeing that many rākṣasas had already been slain, Pulastya said: "That which befell thy father was brought about by his own curse! No rākṣasa was capable of devouring Çakti; he himself provided for his own death! Vigṇamitra was only a blind instrument in that matter. Both Çakti and Kalmāshapāda have ascended to heaven, and are enjoying great happiness, as also the other sons of Vasishṭha. Abandon this sacrifice of thine." Parācāra then brought his sacrifice to an end, and threw the fire into the woods on the north of the Himavat, where it may be seen to this day consuming rākṣasas and trees and stones in all seasons (parvati parvati) (I, 181).

Once Indra, riding on Airāvata, surveyed his happy subjects, and, descending to earth, he made a visit to the rishi Baka, who had lived for 100,000 years and was adored by gods and rishis (? devarshigāṇasavita, v. 13236; PCB. has the accus.), in his hermitage in the east by the seaside. Indra asked him about the sorrows of those who have a long life. Baka mentioned several common disagreeable things, and finally, the having to witness the injustices that take place. Indra then asked him about their joys; he mentioned the frugal life of a pious brahman, who only eats after having waited on his guest.

Bakavadha ("the slaughter of Baka"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 313 (Bakavadhaḥ parva, i.e. Bakavadhaparvan).

Bakavadhaparvan ("the slaughter of Baka," the 10th of the minor parvas of Mbhbr.). § 215: I, 157 ff.: The Pāṇḍavas for some time dwelt in the abode of the brahman, living on alms; Bhīma alone used to eat one-half of the alms. One day Bhīma and Kuntī overheard the brahman complaining (I, 157), and his wife (I, 158) and daughter asked to be sacrificed for him to a rākshasa, and their little son said that he would slay the rākshasa with a blade of grass. Kuntī approached (I, 159), and learned that the rākshasa Baka ("king of the Asuras," v. 6808), a cannibal, protected the town and the country, receiving as his fee a cartload of rice, two buffaloes, and the human being who brought them to him, from one after another of the householders, while the king, residing in Vetrakītyagrha (see BR.), did nothing to protect the country against him. Now the turn had come for the brahman, and as he had no wealth to buy a man, and could not part with any of his family, he would go with all his family to the rākshasa, in order that he might devour them all (I, 160). Kuntī said that one of her sons would bring the food to the rākshasa. This the brahman energetically refused, until she had told him that on account of his strength and mantras her son would be safe; but he ought not to disclose this fact to anybody, for then people might trouble them out of curiosity, and if her son imparted his knowledge to anybody he would himself no longer be able to profit by it. Bhīma also consented (I, 161). When the others returned home with their alms, Yudhiṣṭhira blamed his mother for her rash act; but she relied on Bhīma (I, 162). The next morning Bhīma set out for the abode of the rākshasa, and approaching he began himself to eat the food he carried, loudly calling the rākshasa by his name. The rākshasa came out in a fury; but Bhīma, disregarding his yells and blows, leisurely ate up the whole of that food and washed his hands. Then they began to hurl trees at each other, and thereupon they clasped each other with their arms. At last Bhīma pressed Baka down to the earth, and placing one knee on the middle of his back, bent him double, while he (Baka) roared frightfully and began to vomit blood (I, 163). Baka died uttering frightful yells. The rākshasas, his relatives, came and promised never again to kill human beings, and from that day the rākshasas of that region were very peaceful towards mankind. Bhīma placed the corpse at one of the gates of the town, and went away unobserved. The brahman told the citizens that it was a brahman skilled in mantras (mantra-siddha) who had slain the rākshasa, and they established a Brahma festival (brahmanamahā) (I, 164).

[Baladevatīrthayātrā] ("Baladeva's visit to the sacred places on the Sarasvatī"; cf. Sarasvatam parva). § 615 (Gadā-y.-p.): Vaiçampāyana said: Baladeva first proceeded to Prabhāsa, where Uḍuāj (i.e. Soma), who had been affected with phthisis (yakṣman), became freed from his curse, whence its name. Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related Prabhāsaṭpattikathana (q.v.). Thence Bala-Rāma proceeded to Camasodbheda, where he passed one night and gave away costly gifts. Thence he proceeded to Udayāna (ḍ) (IX, 35-36), and thence to Vinaçana (IX, 36), called so by the R. because the Sarasvatī has there become invisible from contempt of Çūdras and Ābhīras. Thence to Subhūmika (e), Gandharvāṇām tīrtha (ḍ), Gargasrotas (e); thence ("smeared in white sandal-paste and attired in blue robes") to Çaṅkhatīrtha (f); thence to the Dvaita lake; then, along the southern bank of the Sarasvatī, to Nāgadhuvān (g). Baladeva then set out with his face towards the East, and one after another reached hundreds and thousands of tīrthas that occurred at every step. Bathing in all those tīrthas, and observing fasts, etc., as directed by R., and giving away wealth in profusion, etc., he (always smeared with white sandal-paste) set out for that spot where the Sarasvatī turns in an eastward direction in order to behold the R. in the forest of Naimisha (h), and he became filled with wonder. "There, at Kurukṣetra, O foremost one of Kuru's race, do thou perform great sacrifices and rites." Thence Bala-Rāma went to the tīrtha Saptasārasvata (description), resorted to by

Vāṇasyas and other ascetics, where the great ascetic crowned with success (siddhaḥ) performed his penances (IX, 37). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the history of Saptasārasvata (i) and Maṅkaṇaka (j) (IX, 39). Having passed one night there, Bala-Rāma went to Auçanasa tīrtha ("the tīrtha of Uçanas") Kapālamocana; the great muni Mahodara, whose thigh had been seized by the head of a Rā. slain by Rāma [Dāçarathi], was liberated. There Kāvyas (i.e. Çukra, Uçanas) had performed tapas, and the whole science of politics and morals (nīti) was revealed to him, while meditating on the war of Dai. and Dā. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the story of Mahodara (k). Thence Bala-Rāma went to the abode of Rushaṅgu (l), where Ārṣṭishēṇa had formerly undergone austere penances, and where the great muni Viçvāmītra had become a brahman. Then to that tīrtha where Brahmdn (Lokapitāmahaḥ) had created the worlds; where the great R. Ārṣṭishēṇa had acquired brahmanhood; where the R.-y. Sindhudvīpa, the great ascetic Devāpi (both in the Kṛta age, IX, 40, 2294), and the muni Viçvāmītra had obtained brahmanhood (IX, 39). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the history of Ārṣṭishēṇa (m) and of Viçvāmītra (n). Thence to the abode of Baka, where Dālbhya Baka had practised austerities (IX, 40); which resounded with the chanting of the Vedas (brahma-ghoshaḥ avākīrṇam; B. has Brahmayoner Avākīrṇam "from Br. to Av.," Nil.), where the R. Baka Dālbhya (o) poured the kingdom of Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vaicitratīryi (? Vaicitratīryiṇaḥ, genitive) as a libation into the sacrificial fire. In that tīrtha Bṛhaspati also poured libations into the sacrificial fire, by means of flesh, in order to destroy the Asuras, and the As. began to waste away and were destroyed by the gods. Thence to Yāyāti tīrtha, where, at a sacrifice of king Yayāti Nāhusa, the Sarasvatī produced milk and clarified butter, whereafter Yayāti went to heaven. Once again Yayāti performed a sacrifice there, and Sarasvatī gave to each of the brahmins everything for which he cherished a wish; they regarded the gifts as made to them by the king, and praised and blessed him; D. and G. were pleased. Thence Baladeva proceeded to the tīrtha Vaiśiṣṭhāparāha (IX, 41). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana told the history of Vaiśiṣṭhāparāha (p), and why it is so rapid, and the brahmanicide of Indra (q), who was purified by bathing in that tīrtha. Thence Baladeva went to the tīrtha of Soma, where in days of yore Soma had performed the Rajasūya sacrifice, with Atri for his hotṛ, after which the great battle took place between D. and Dā., Dai., and a Rā., named Tāraka, in which Skanda (Mahāseṇa) slew Tāraka and obtained the command of the celestial forces; in that tīrtha is a gigantic Açvattha tree, under whose shade Karttikēya (Skanda) always resides in person (IX, 43). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the investiture of Skanda (u). The tīrtha, where in days of yore Varuṇa, the lord of the waters, had been installed by the celestials, is named Tujasa. Having bathed in that tīrtha and adored Skanda, Bala-Rāma gave gold, etc., to the brahmins; passing one night there, he became cheerful and happy (IX, 44-46). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the installation of Varuṇa (v) in a former kalpa. Thence Baladeva ("the slayer of Pralamba") proceeded to Agnitīrtha, where Agni, disappearing, became concealed in the Çamī wood, wherefore the gods repaired to Brahmdn, and asked him to create fire. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana related the story of Agnitīrtha (w). Thence

he went to Brahmayoni, where Brahmān had exercised his functions of creation; in days of yore Brahmān, having bathed in that tīrtha with all the gods, created all the tīrthas for the gods, according to due rites. Thence to Kaṁbera tīrtha, where Āilavila (i.e. Kubera) (x), having practised austerities, obtained the mastery of all treasures (Dhanādhipatyam), and all kinds of wealth, etc., came to him of their own accord. Rāma there beheld the excellent woods of Kubera. Thence Bala-Rāma went to Badarapācana, where the fruits of every season are always to be found (IX, 47), and where many ascetics and Si. are dwelling. (The story of Badarapācana (y) and of Arundhatī (s).) Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiṣampāyana related the birth of Ṛtūvātī (aa). Then Baladeva proceeded to Indratīrtha (IX, 48). (The history of Indratīrtha (bb).) Thence to Rāmatīrtha (cc), the resort of D. and B.-r. Thence to Yamunatīrtha (dd). Thence Baladeva, adorned with garlands of wild flowers (vanamālī), proceeded to Ādityatīrtha (ee), where also R. Asita Devala obtained great yoga powers (IX, 49). (The history of Asita Devala (ff).) Thence Bala-Rāma went to the tīrtha of Soma (IX, 50), where Soma had in former days performed the Rājāsūya sacrifice, and where the great battle was fought about Tūrā (Turakāmayā). Thence Bala-Rāma proceeded to the tīrtha of the muni Sarasvata, where, during a drought of twelve years, Sarasvata in former days taught the Vedas to many brahmins. Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiṣampāyana related the history of Sarasvata (gg) and of Dadhīca (hh). Thence Bala-Rāma proceeded to the tīrtha of the old maiden (vyddhakanyā) (IX, 51). Requested by Janamejaya, Vaiṣampāyana related the story of the vyddhakanyā (ii). While there, Baladeva heard of the slaughter of Čalya. Having come out of the environs of Samantapanca (Samantapañcakadvārāt), he enquired of the R. what was the result of a visit to Kurukṣetra, which they told him (IX, 52). (Kurukṣetra-kāthana (kk) (IX, 53).) Having visited Kurukṣetra, Bala-Rāma proceeded to a large and exceedingly beautiful hermitage, overgrown with madhukas, etc., and was told by R.: Here Vishnu in days of yore undertook austere penances and performed duly all the eternal sacrifices. Here a brāhmaṇī girl, having from youth observed the vow of brahmacarya, was crowned with success (siddhā), and, in possession of yoga powers, she proceeded to heaven. The beautiful daughter of Čaṇḍilya, a brahmacāriṇī, who had performed penances difficult to women, went to heaven [here], and was worshipped by the gods and brahmins. Baladeva then began his ascent of Himavat, and soon came to the tīrtha Plakṣaprasavaṇa, and thence to the tīrtha Kārapācana (PCR. °vapa°), where he passed one night. > the asylum of Mitra and Varuṇa. From Kārapācana > that spot on the Yamunā where in days of yore Indra, Agni, and Aryama had obtained great happiness. Then he sat down with R. and Si. in order to listen to their talk. There came R. Nārada (U), and, asked by Bala-Rāma, he told him all that had happened to the Kurus, including the names of those chiefs that had fallen (v), and of those that were still alive (ζ), and asked him to go to the field to witness the mace-encounter between Bhīma and Duryodhana, which was to take place that very day. Bala-Rāma then bade farewell, and dismissed all those that had accompanied him to Dvāraka, and descended from Himavat and Plakṣaprasavaṇa, and sang a verse in praise of the Sarasvatī. Then he ascended a chariot with goodly steeds, and arrived on the field (IX, 54).

One day, having found no other animal, he slew a blind (ghṛtācākṣuṣhaṇ) beast of prey while it was drinking water. A shower of flowers fell from the skies; a celestial chariot took him to heaven, while Aps., etc., were singing. That beast of prey had by austerities obtained a boon, and had become the cause of the destruction of all creatures. For this reason he was made blind by Brahman.

[Bali-Vāsava-samvāda(h)] ("the discourse between Bali and Indra"). (a) § 671b (Mokṣadh.): One day, after having subjugated all As., Indra asked Brahmān where Bali now was, he who was Vāyu, etc. (a). Brahmān said that Bali might now have taken his birth among camels or bulls, etc., and be staying in a deserted house; he told Indra not to slay him, but to ask him for instruction in morality. Indra roamed over the earth on Airāvata, and found Bali in a deserted house in the form of an ass. Indra scoffed at him, and asked if he did not grieve, and where his 42,000 Gandharvas had gone who in former days used to dance before him, and also about the garland given to him by Brahmān. Bali said: "When thou becomest like me, thou wilt not indulge in speech like this" (XII, 223). Bali said that D., men, P., G., snakes, and Rā. were under his sway in days gone by, and that all creatures used to flatter him; but he did not grieve at all; in reality it is Time that creates and destroys all things, though living creatures brag of doing this or that; "this royal glory (rājya-çṛī) . . . does not dwell long in one place; she had dwelt in thousands of Indras before thee, who were very much superior to thee; . . . knowing thee to be full of vanity, she will very soon desert thee" (XII, 224). Indra saw Çṛi, adorned with head-plumes, etc., issue out of Bali, who did not know whether she was an As. damsel or a celestial one or a human one; Indra asked her who she was, as she stood there like Māyā herself; she said: "Virocana did not yet know me; Bali does not know me; the learned called me Duḥśaha ('difficult to be borne'), etc. (β); thou knowest me not, O Indra, nor does any one of the deities know me; nor the Creator (Dhātā), nor the Ordainer (Vidhātā) rules over me; it is Time that moves me from one place to another; do not disregard Bali. Bali has fallen off from truth, etc.; formerly he was devoted to the brahmins, etc.; but latterly he began to cherish feelings of animosity towards the brahmins and touched clarified butter with soiled hands; therefore I desert him and shall henceforth dwell in thee; there is none among D., G., As., or Rā. that can keep me for ever." Requested by Indra, she told him how she might be able to reside in him permanently, dividing herself into four parts, according to the ordinance laid down in the Vedas: one to be established on earth, one in the waters, one in Fire, one among the good, while Indra should continue to protect her. Bali said that when the Sun would shine only upon the region of Brahmān in the middle of Sumera, then a great battle between the gods and the Asuras would again occur, and in that fight Bali would certainly vanquish them all. Indra said that Brahmān had commanded him never to kill him; "never will come the day when the Sun will shine only from the meridian (madhyataḥ sthitaḥ); Brahmān has before this laid down the laws that regulate the Sun's motions . . ." Bali proceeded towards the South; Indra proceeded towards the North and ascended the skies (XII, 225).—(b) § 673b (Mokṣadh.): Bhīṣma said: After the battle between the gods and the Asuras, in which a large number of Dai. and Dā. fell, Bali became king. He was deceived by Viṣṇu, who once more established his sway over all the worlds. Indra was once more invested with the sovereignty of the gods, etc.; the three worlds once more swelled with prosperity, and Brahmān became glad of heart. At that time Indra, accompanied by R., V., Ā., A., D.-ṛ., G.,

Si., etc., seated on the four-tusked Airāvata, made a progress through all the worlds. Once he saw Bali Vairocana within a certain mountain cave on the sea-shore. Bali showed no signs of sorrow or agitation. Indra asked him how it was that he was so unmoved; "thou art bound with Varuṇa's noose and hast been struck with my thunderbolt." Bali said: "What I am now, thou wilt be in the future," explaining that only time (not merit) rules the destiny of men; "that thou regardest thyself as the actor is the root of all sorrow"; "in the course of time many thousands of Indras and of deities have been swept away yuga after yuga, and will be swept away in future . . . , just as Prithu, etc. (a)," though they were devoted to the Vedas and Vedic rites, etc., and though all of them were the offspring of Dakṣa's daughters; "those 1,000 [celestial years], that are the measure of thy away, will surely come to an end"; "Ā., R., Sā., V., and M. were all vanquished by me," etc. Indra's panegyric on Bali. Indra left the spot and was praised by the M.-r.; Fire once more began to bear the libations [to the gods], etc. (XII, 227)

§ 248 (Arjunavanāvāsap.): I, 214, 7777.

Bhagavadgītā ("the song of the Exalted one"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 338 (parva, i.e. Bhagavadgītāparvan).

[Bhagavadgītāparvan(^ova)] ("the section including the song of the Exalted one," the 69th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Bhagavadgītā). § 576: Saṁjaya informs Dhṛtarāṣṭra of Bhīṣma's fall in battle (VI, 13). Dhṛtarāṣṭra's lament and inquiries (VI, 14). Saṁjaya, praising Vyāsa for his yoga-power, i.e. the celestial vision (description) he had given him, began his discourse on the battle. Duryodhana gave Duhśāna instructions about the protection of Bhīṣma from Chikhaṇḍin (VI, 15). The two hosts arrayed at sunrise (description). Çakuni, etc. (a), stood each at the head of an akṣauhīni; the 11th under Bhīṣma (description) stood in advance of the whole army. The *Srījaya*s, headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna, looked [beholding Bhīṣma] like small animals beholding a lion (VI, 16). On that day Soma approached the region of the Pitrā. Omens. Every morning Bhīṣma and Droṇa prayed for victory for the Pāṇḍavas, though they must fight for Dhṛtarāṣṭra according to their pledge: Bhīṣma briefly addressed the Kuru army, mentioning Niḥhaga, etc. (β), as examples. Karna, with his friends and relatives, laid aside his weapons owing to Bhīṣma. Description of the proceedings of the army, especially of Bhīṣma, etc. (γ) (VI, 17). Duhśāna, etc. (δ), protected Bhīṣma from behind, etc. (VI, 18). Yudhishthira told Arjuna, according to the words of the M.-r. Brhaspati, to array the troops in newle-mouthed (çucimukha) array. Arjuna said that he would make a Vajra array, which was designed by Indra; they would all seek shelter with Bhīma. The leaders were Bhīmasena, etc. (c). Omens (VI, 19). When the sun rose the Kauravas stood facing the west, the Pāṇḍavas facing the east. Disposition of the two armies: Duryodhana, etc. (z) (VI, 20). Yudhishthira sorrowfully addressed Arjuna, who consoled him with his truth, righteousness, etc., which Nārada, Bhīṣma, and Droṇa know, and which were a powerful aid towards victory according to Brāhman's words to Indra, etc., on the occasion of the battle between the gods and the Asuras; "victory clings to Kṛṣṇa"; it was by choosing him that the gods under Indra had vanquished the Asuras (VI, 21). Disposition of the troops in the Pāṇḍava army: Chikhaṇḍin, etc. (η) (VI, 22). At Kṛṣṇa's instance Arjuna recited a hymn to Durgā. Durgā appeared and gave him assurances of victory. Merits of this hymn (VI, 23). The combatants of both armies were cheerful, etc. (VI, 24). Before Droṇa, Duryodhana compared the combatants of the Pāṇḍava army: Bhīma, etc. (θ), with his own; Droṇa, etc. (ι). Kṛṣṇa, etc., blew Pañcajanya, etc. (κ). Arjuna asked Kṛṣṇa to place his chariot between the two armies, so that he might see who were assembled to fight. Beholding his relatives, etc., Arjuna was filled with compassion and overcome with despondency, and refused to fight (VI, 25). Kṛṣṇa appealed to Arjuna to shake off his despondency, but in vain. Kṛṣṇa then declared to Arjuna the nature and the attributes of the soul, and the folly of grieving for the dead, and exhorted him to comply with the duties of his order by fighting fairly, and to apply himself to work for work's sake, and not for the sake of its results. Kṛṣṇa spoke of contemplation (VI, 26); on the Sāṅkhyas and Yogins; on devotion to work (VI, 27); on his reiterated births; on the best way (VI, 28); on abandonment of actions and application to actions; he has the right view who considers Sāṅkhyas and Yoga as one (VI, 29); on the means of rising to devotion (VI, 30); on Kṛṣṇa identified with Brāhman (VI, 31); on the nature of Brāhman (VI, 32); on Kṛṣṇa as the pervader of the whole universe, and as the enjoyer of all sacrifice (VI, 33); on Kṛṣṇa as the source of the gods, etc. Arjuna believed what Kṛṣṇa said, and what also had been said by all the R., and the D.-r. Nārada, and Aṣṭa Devala and Vyāsa. Kṛṣṇa declared his divine perfections to Arjuna (VI, 34), and disclosed his supreme sovereign form; he was praised by Arjuna (VI, 35); he discoursed on the two kinds of worshippers (VI, 36); on the body and the soul, etc., the supreme object of knowledge (VI, 37); on the three guṇas (Goodness, Passion, and Darkness) (VI, 38); on the symbolical Açvattha (VI, 39); on godlike and demoniac natures and births (VI, 40); on the threefold nature of faith (VI, 41); on renunciation and abandonment. —Arjuna's delusion is destroyed, and he once more takes up the Gāṇḍivā (VI, 42).

Bhagavadyāna(m) ("the journey of Kṛṣṇa"). § 10: I, 2, 331, i.e. Bhagavadyānaparvan.

Bhagavad-yāna(m) ("the departure of Kṛṣṇa"). § 262 (Sabbhākr.): Kṛṣṇa, after some time, desirous of beholding his father, left Khāṇḍavaprastha, having taken leave of Prthā, Subhadra, Kṛṣṇa, and Dhaumya. The Pāṇḍavas, etc., followed him half a yojana, Yudhishthira causing Dāraka to stand aside and, himself taking the reins, riding on Kṛṣṇa's golden chariot with Garuḍa on the banner, and yoked with Çaieya and Sugriva. Then he caused them to retire, and with Sāttaṭa (PCR. has Sātyaki) and Dāraka reached Dvārakā, worshipped by Ugrasena, etc.; and having embraced Pradyumna, Çamba, Niçatka, Çarudeshna, Gada, Aniruddha, and Bhānu, and having worshipped Āhuka and (? BR. hero takes Āhuka to be the name of his father) his old father and mother and Bala, he entered the dwelling of Rukmiṇī. Yudhishthira at Indraprastha sported with Draupadī, dismissing all his friends, brothers, and sons (II, 2).

[Bhagavadyānaparvan] ("the section relating to the journey of Kṛṣṇa," the 62nd of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Bhagavadyāna). § 562: Yudhishthira spoke to Kṛṣṇa about the mission of Saṁjaya and the wickedness of Duryodhana and Dhṛtarāṣṭra; though he was supported by the Kūçis, etc. (a), he asked for only five villages (Avisthala, etc., β) or towns, and complained of the cruel duties of the kṣatriya order. Kṛṣṇa said he was willing to go to the Kuru court in order to negotiate a peace, and Yudhishthira, after some hesitation, agreed to the proposal (V, 72). Kṛṣṇa mentioned the offences of the Kauravas, and said that he thought war to be certain; all the omens pointed in that direction; therefore Yudhishtira should collect everything needed for battle (V, 73). Bhīma told Kṛṣṇa to speak mildly and not threaten the Kurus with war. "Just as, when Dharma became extinct, Kali was born in the race of the Asuras, who flourished with prosperity and blazed with energy, so was Uddavarta born among the Haihayas, etc. (γ). These vile individuals sprang up, at the end of each yuga, in their respective races for the destruction of their kinsmen; so has Duryodhana been born at the end of the yuga among us the Kurus. Yudhishtira and Arjuna too are averse from war" (V, 74). Kṛṣṇa scoffed at Bhīma for his unusual mildness, though he had sworn, as the sun journeyed around Mṛu, to slay Duryodhana with his mace (V, 75). Bhīma mentioned his well-known valour, and said that he was for bearing their injuries, only for fear lest the Bharata race might be extirpated (V, 76). Kṛṣṇa explained that he had only spoken through affection (V, 77). Arjuna told Kṛṣṇa to strive sincerely to bring about peace; for he was able to do whatever he would; but if Kṛṣṇa deemed the destruction of the Kurus to be preferable, "let it be effected soon"; he mentioned the offences of Duryodhana towards themselves and Draupadī. At all events, Kṛṣṇa best knew what was for their good (V, 78). Kṛṣṇa said he would try to bring about what was beneficial to both the Pāṇḍavas and the Kurus; to make peace was within his power; he would do all that could be done by human exertion, but he could not control destiny; Duryodhana, etc. (δ), would never make peace by giving up the kingdom; many a time he had tried to withdraw Kṛṣṇa from Arjuna; about a year ago, on the occasion of attacking Virāṭa's kine, Bhīshma had solicited Duryodhana about this very peace (V, 79). Nakula told Kṛṣṇa to act according to his own opinion, disregarding all he had heard. Their attachment for the kingdom was now greater than ever, as nobody could encounter Yudhishtira, etc. (ε). He should first speak mildly and then threaten Duryodhana. He did not doubt that he would accomplish his object, for Vidura, etc. (ζ), would understand him (V, 80). Sahadeva said that Kṛṣṇa ought to provoke a war, because of the insults to Draupadī. Satyaki approved of this, and thus did all the heroes present (V, 81). Kṛṣṇa approved of the words of Sahadeva and Satyaki, mentioned weeping the injustice of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras, and that they had refused to give even five villages, Avisthala, etc. (η), and was of opinion that there was no necessity for going thither in order to make peace. Kṛṣṇa consoled her: "Thou wilt soon see thy husbands slay their enemies, and crowned by prosperity" (V, 82). Arjuna once more besought Kṛṣṇa to try to make peace. On the next morning, at the Maitra hour, in the month of Kaumuda (Kārttika), under the constellation Revati, at the season of dews, Autumn having departed (description), Kṛṣṇa caused Çini's grandson Satyaki to prepare his chariot (description); they yoked to it Çaiḍya, Sugriva, Meghapushpa, and Balāhaka. Garuḍa came and perched on the flagstaff. And taking Satyaki also upon it, he set out under auspicious omens; Vasishtha, etc. (θ), and D.-ṛ. and B.-ṛ. (devabrahmarshayaḥ caiva) walked around him (pradakṣhiṇam avaranta). Yudhishtira, etc. (θ), followed him on the way, and told him to salute Kuntī, etc. (ι). Arjuna said he was for peace, but if Duryodhana would not give them what they demanded, he would annihilate the Kshatriya race. Bhīma uttered a terrible shout, so that the bowmen trembled in fear, and steeds and elephants were seen to void urine and faeces. When all the kings had desisted following him, Kṛṣṇa set out with Duruka. On his way he met with some Rahis, and Jamadagni's son, the friend of Brahmān (Surāsurapateḥ), told him that the D.-ṛ., brahmana, and B.-ṛ., who had witnessed the former feats of gods and Asuras (devāsurasya drashṭārāḥ purāṇasya), had come to see and hear the assemblage at Hastinapura (V, 83). Ten chariot-warriors followed in Kṛṣṇa's train, and 100 foot-soldiers and attendants by hundreds, carrying provisions in abundance. Sinister omens occurred over Hastinapura; but where Kṛṣṇa passed everything became auspicious. At Vṛkashthala he passed the night (V, 84). Meanwhile Dhṛtarāṣṭra, having heard from his spies that Kṛṣṇa was coming, respectfully addressed Bhīshma, etc. (κ), and said to Duryodhana and his counsellors that Kṛṣṇa ("the lord of all creatures," etc.) should be received with the greatest honour; "let pavilions be set up on the road," etc. Bhīshma, etc., approved of it, and Duryodhana made the arrangements. But Kṛṣṇa did not even glance at it (V, 85). When Kṛṣṇa was staying at Vṛkashthala and intended to come to Hastinapura the next morning, Dhṛtarāṣṭra spoke to Vidura about how he intended to treat Kṛṣṇa in order to honour him (V, 86). Vidura blamed Dhṛtarāṣṭra for his insincerity; "the right hospitality to be offered to Kṛṣṇa is to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas, and thou wilt not give them even five villages, and seekest only to separate Kṛṣṇa from the Pāṇḍavas" (V, 87). Duryodhana said that it was of no use to bestow wealth and honour upon Kṛṣṇa, as he could never be separated from the Pāṇḍavas, "and he will only think that we are worshipping him out of fear." Bhīshma advised them to do as Kṛṣṇa would say. Duryodhana declared that he would imprison Kṛṣṇa. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and all his counsellors became deeply afflicted, especially as Kṛṣṇa came as an ambassador. Inflamed with rage, Bhīshma rose and left the place (V, 88). The next morning Kṛṣṇa rose at daybreak and arrived in Hastinapura, and was solemnly received by all the Dhṛtarāṣṭras (except Duryodhana), etc. (λ), and the citizens (description). Having saluted Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (μ), he went to the abode of Vidura (V, 89). In the afternoon he visited Kuntī, who wept for her sons, comparing Yudhishtira to Ambarisha, etc. (ν), mentioning the feats of Bhīmasena (ο), comparing Arjuna to Kārtavīrya, etc. (π), and also inquiring about Sahadeva and Nakula, and likewise about Draupadī (whom she had not seen for fourteen long years), mentioning how she was dragged by Duḥśāṇa, while Bahlika, etc. (ρ), grieved; but especially she praised Vidura. "Full 14 years have gone since Duryodhana first exiled my son." She mentioned the invisible voice on the night of Arjuna's birth, and trusted to Dharma and the Creator and Kṛṣṇa. She asked Kṛṣṇa to tell her sons that she besought them to avenge themselves and Draupadī, as even death was better than a life gained by meanness. Kṛṣṇa consoled her, and then departed for Duryodhana's mansion (V, 90). Kṛṣṇa entered Duryodhana's palace (description), where he also beheld Duḥśāṇa, Karna, and Çakuni. Duryodhana asked him to dine at his house; but Kṛṣṇa did not accept the invitation, because he hated the Pāṇḍavas, and went to Vidura's abode, where Drona, etc. (σ), came to him (V, 91). Vidura warned Kṛṣṇa against Duryodhana, who would never make peace, because he trusted Bhīshma, etc. (τ), and distrusted Kṛṣṇa (V, 92). Kṛṣṇa said that he knew Duryodhana; but great would be the merit earned by him who liberates the whole earth from the noose of death; and even if he should meet failure, the merit of that intended act would become his;

"moreover, I have come here in order that unrighteous, foolish, and inimical persons shall not afterwards be free to say that Kṛṣṇa made no attempt to restrain them from slaughtering one another, though he was competent to do so." Then he laid himself down for sleep (V, 93). In the morning Duryodhana and Çakuni came and invited him to go to the council where Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Bhishma, etc., were present; he rode thither in his chariot with Daruka, putting on his gem Kaustubha, and being protected by the Vṛkṣas, and he was followed by Vidura in his own chariot, and by Duryodhana and Çakuni in one chariot, and by Satyaki and Kṛtavarman and the other chariot-warriors of the Vṛkṣi race in chariots and on steeds and elephants (description). Then he entered the court with Vidura and Satyaki; before him sat Karna and Duryodhana, behind him the Vṛkṣas with Kṛtavarman. Bhishma, Droṇa, etc., with Dhṛtarāṣṭra rose up in his honour, etc. He beheld the Rakṣas staying in the skies with Nārada at their head, and caused Bhishma to offer them seats. Duhçāsana gave a seat to Satyaki, and Vicīṇṣati one to Kṛtavarman (V, 94). Kṛṣṇa spoke of the just complaints and claims of the Pāṇḍavas, and said that with them as his allies Dhṛtarāṣṭra would become invincible, having Bhishma, etc. (v). "Let not the peoples of the earth be exterminated! If thou regainest thy natural disposition, the earth may continue to be peopled as now." All the kings there present highly applauded the words of Kṛṣṇa in their hearts, but none of them ventured to say anything in the presence of Duryodhana (V, 95).—§ 563: Jāmadagnya then told Dambhodbhuvopākhyāna (q.v.). "Great, indeed, was that feat of old achieved by Nara. Nārāyaṇa again became superior to Nara in consequence of many additional qualities. Therefore, O king, before such weapons as Kūkudika, etc. (φ), are placed on the string of the Gāṇḍīra, go thou to Dhunaijaya, laying aside thy pride!" These weapons have other names corresponding to the eight passions (lust, wrath, etc.; description) (V, 96).—§ 564: Mātalyopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 565: After Karna had spoken, Kṛṣṇa, Bhishma, and Nārada in vain admonished Duryodhana. Nārada related the old story Gālavacarita (q.v.), and—§ 566: The fall of Yayāti (q.v.).—§ 567: Dhṛtarāṣṭra complained that Duryodhana never listened to his, etc. (α), words, and asked Kṛṣṇa to admonish him. Kṛṣṇa reminded Duryodhana of what was agreeable to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (β), and warned him against Duhçāsana, etc. (γ). Bhishma, etc. (δ), could not fight against Bhīma and Arjuna, who had vanquished D., G., Y., A., and Pn. at Khaṇḍavaprastha; who encountered many at Virāṭa's city, etc. (ε) (V, 124). Bhishma, Droṇa, Vidura, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra recommended Duryodhana to follow the counsels of Kṛṣṇa (V, 125). Bhishma and Droṇa warned Duryodhana against Kṛṣṇa, etc. (ζ) (V, 126). Duryodhana complained that Kṛṣṇa always censured him; in the match of dice blame could not be attached to him. He quoted this saying of Mātanga, "one should always keep himself erect . . ." (V, 127). Kṛṣṇa indignantly answered Duryodhana, mentioning his offences against the Pāṇḍavas, Vāraṇavata, etc. (η). Duhçāsana said to Duryodhana that the Kauravas would bind him, and Bhishma, Droṇa, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra would make Duryodhana, Karna, and Duhçāsana over to the Pāṇḍavas. Disregarding Vidura, etc. (θ), Duryodhana went out of the court in anger. Kṛṣṇa blamed them for not having forcibly seized and bound Duryodhana; "I think the time has come for doing this"; he reminded them of how he had himself slain Karna, and then installed Ugrasena on the throne, for the benefit of all the Yādavas, Andhakas, and Vṛkṣas; and that when the gods and Asuras, etc. (ι), were arrayed for battle Parameshthin had commanded Dharma to bind the Daityas and the Dānavas and make them over to Varuṇa, who having bound them with Dharma's noose and also with his own, kept them within the depths of the ocean. In the same way they ought to bind Duryodhana, etc. (κ) (V, 128). Dhṛtarāṣṭra caused Vidura to fetch Gāndhārī, who blamed Dhṛtarāṣṭra, because he had by his indulgence caused Duryodhana now to be the slave of delusion and incapable of being turned back; she then caused Vidura to fetch Duryodhana, whom she rebuked severely and asked to obey the words of his well-wishers Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (λ); Bhishma and Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Bahlika [formerly] gave the Pāṇḍavas their share from fear of a disunion. If Bhishma, etc. (μ), became enraged the population of the earth would be exterminated. The affection of Bhishma, Droṇa, and Kṛṣṇa towards the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhṛtarāṣṭras was equal; "it is never seen in this world that men acquire wealth by avarice" (V, 129). Disregarding the words of his mother, Duryodhana again went away in anger, and began to consult with Çakuni, and Duryodhana, etc. (ν), resolved upon seizing Kṛṣṇa; then the Pāṇḍavas with the Somakas would become depressed. Satyaki knew it, caused Kṛtavarman to array the troops at the entrance of the court, and informed Kṛṣṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and Vidura, but laughed at the project. Vidura told Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the last hour of all his sons was at hand. Kṛṣṇa said to Dhṛtarāṣṭra that if his sons perpetrated such a deed Yudhisṭhira's object would be accomplished, "for this very day, seizing them with all who follow them, I can make them over to the Pāṇḍavas; I will not, however, commit any such censurable deed that can proceed only from wrath and a sinful understanding." Dhṛtarāṣṭra once more caused Vidura to fetch Duryodhana with his brothers, etc., and rebuked them; "dost thou not know Kṛṣṇa, who is incapable of being defeated in battle by D., men, G., A., and U.?" Vidura reminded Duryodhana that at the gates of Saubha the monkey Drivida covered Kṛṣṇa with a shower of stones, but could not seize him; nor could Naraka with all the Dānavas at Prāgiyotishā; slaying Naraka, Kṛṣṇa brought away 1,000 damsels and married them all. In the city of Nirmocana 6,000 mighty Asuras failed to seize him with their nooses. He also mentioned Paṇḍu Çakuni, etc. (f) (V, 130). Kṛṣṇa reminded Duryodhana that he was not alone, and from his body issued myriads of gods, etc. (g); all the kings were terrified and closed their eyes, except Bhishma, Droṇa, Vidura, Saijaya, and the Rakṣas; for Kṛṣṇa gave them celestial sight, etc. Then he went out with Satyaki and Kṛtavarman. The Rakṣas Nārada, etc., vanished. He found Daruka waiting with his chariot (description) drawn by Çaiḍya, and Kṛtavarman, who had mounted his chariot. Dhṛtarāṣṭra excused himself, saying that he was powerless. Kṛṣṇa bade farewell to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (κ), and set out, followed by Bhishma, etc. (ρ), to the abode of Kunti (V, 131). Kunti asked him to admonish Yudhisṭhira to attend to the duties of his own order, and not contemplate virtue alone ("thy virtue is decreasing greatly"), citing Mucukunda (δ). It is the king that creates the Kṛta, Tṛta, or Dvāpara age; if he creates the Kṛta age, he enjoys heaven exceedingly; if he creates the Tṛta, he enjoys heaven, but not exceedingly; if he causes the Dvāpara age to set in, he enjoys heaven according to his due; if he promotes the Kali age, he will reside in hell for countless years. "That understanding according to which thou art now acting, is not in accordance with the intentions of Pāṇḍu, or myself, or thy grandsire, when we uttered blessings on thee before," etc. (V, 132). "In this connection is cited an old story: § 568. Vidulāputraśāna" (q.v.).—§ 569: Kuntī asked Kṛṣṇa to remind Arjuna of the voice heard at his birth (that he should rival Indra, vanquish the Kurus, conquer the earth aided by Bhīma; slay the Kurus in battle with Kṛṣṇa as his ally, and recover his share in the kingdom, and, with his brothers, perform three great sacrifices); to Bhīma he should say that "the time has come for that in view of which a kṣātrīya lady brings forth a son"; Kṛṣṇa he should praise for her behaviour towards the Pāṇḍavas; he should remind Nakula and Sahadeva, that they must not forgive the insults towards Draupadī, that was worse than the defeat at dice and the exile; Arjuna should always tread in the path pointed out by Draupadī; Bhīma and Arjuna are a pair of Yamas capable of slaying the very gods; they should revenge the harsh words said by Duḥśāna to Bhīma. Kṛṣṇa bade farewell to Bhīshma, etc., took Karna upon his chariot and set out with Sātyaki, deliberating with Karna for a long time. Then he dismissed Karna, and driven by Dāraka the steeds soon reached Upeplavya. The Kurus assembled and talked about Kṛṣṇa (V, 137). Bhīshma and Droṇa reminded Duryodhana of what Kuntī had said to Kṛṣṇa, and the exploits of Arjuna; they recommended peace; fearful omens appeared (V, 138). Duryodhana was cheerless and silent. Bhīshma complained. Droṇa said that his affection for Arjuna was greater than for Açrathāman; Duryodhana ought to have followed the counsels of the elders; Yudhishtira was invincible; the Pāṇḍavas had procured wealth from Kubera's abode; "the periods of our lives have run out"; etc. (V, 139). Requested by Dhṛtarāshtra, Sanjaya related the conversation between Kṛṣṇa and Karna (see the note of PCR.). Kṛṣṇa disclosed to Karna that he was virtually the son of Pāṇḍu, and on the side of his father was related to the Pāṇḍavas, on the side of his mother to the Vṛshnis. He ought to come with him to the Pāṇḍavas, being the elder brother of Yudhishtira, and be installed as king by Dharmya, etc. (a), Yudhishtira being his heir-presumptive and ruling the kingdom under him; "during the sixth period Draupadī also will come to thee"; "let the Dravīḍas, etc. (β), walk before thee" (V, 140). Karna admitted that he was virtually the son of Pāṇḍu, Kuntī having, while a maiden, born him to Sarya and then abandoned him. But the Sūta Adhiratha had taken him to his home; from her affection for him Rādha's breasts were filled with milk that very day, and she held his urine and faeces; "how can one like us . . . deprive her of her piṇḍa?" Adhiratha regarded Karna as a son, and Karna regarded Adhiratha as a father; he had caused all the rites of infancy to be performed on Karna according to the scriptures; he had caused the name Vasudeva to be bestowed upon him by the brahmins; when Karna attained to youth he married wives according to Adhiratha's selection; with them he had begotten sons and grandsons. Through Duryodhana he had enjoyed sovereignty for thirteen years. His many sacrifices had always been with Satas, as had also his family rites and marriage rites. It was only after having got hold of Karna that Duryodhana had decided upon war with the Pāṇḍavas, Karna having been chosen as the antagonist of Arjuna. Their discourse ought to be kept secret, lest Yudhishtira should refuse to accept the kingdom; and "if the empire becomes mine I shall certainly make it over to Duryodhana only." He praised Yudhishtira, etc. (γ), and the weapons of Arjuna (δ), comparing the combat to a sacrifice; and Bhīma's drinking the blood of Duḥśāna to the Soma-drinking, etc. (V, 141). Kṛṣṇa said the victory of the Pāṇḍavas was very certain; he described Arjuna's banner, made by Bhaumana by celestial illusion; his Aindra, Āgneya, and Mārula weapons, etc.; "then all signs of the Kṛta, Treta, and Dvāpara ages will disappear." He forbade Bhīmasena's dancing, having quaffed the blood of Duḥśāna, etc. (ε). "Returning hence, say to Bhīshma, etc. (ζ), that the present month is a delightful one; 7 days hence it will be the day of the new moon, presided over by Indra; let the battle commence then" (V, 142). Karna ascribed the approaching destruction to Çakuni, etc. (η), and mentioned diverse sinister visions of planets (θ), etc., and he had seen in a vision, foreboding victory, Yudhishtira, etc. (i), and the inverse respecting Bhīshma, etc. (κ). "Arjuna embraced Kṛṣṇa, descended from his chariot, and riding in his own chariot, which was decked with gold, came back with us" (V, 143). Vidura approached Kuntī and spoke of the state and disposition of Yudhishtira, etc. (λ), and the allies of Yudhishtira (μ). Kuntī thought with grief on those who were going to fight (ν). Especially she was afraid of Arjuna; she recollected the boon of Durvasas and its consequences (ξ). She went to Karna, who was standing performing his prayers on the bank of Gaṅgā with his face turned towards the east and his arms upraised; and she stayed behind him, waiting for the completion of his prayers. Then, turning round, he beheld Kuntī (V, 144). Kuntī disclosed to Karna his birth, mentioned the justice of the Pāṇḍava cause and the injustice of Duryodhana's, and besought him to join the Pāṇḍavas (V, 145). Sarya corroborated the words of Kuntī. But Karna represented to her the great injury she had done him; he could not now frustrate the hope of the Kauravas; but "except Arjuna thy other sons shall not be slain by me." They then left the spot, turning into different directions (V, 146). At Upeplavya Kṛṣṇa represented to the Pāṇḍavas all that had happened at Hastinapura. In the night, Yudhishtira again brought Kṛṣṇa into their midst, and caused him to repeat what had been said by Bhīshma, etc. (o); Bhīshma had related his own life (π); he mentioned a duel with Rama [Jāmadagnya], whose Vicitravīrya fled, having been deserted by his subjects; upon Vicitravīrya's death anarchy prevailed in the kingdom, and Indra did not give a drop of rain; afflicted by hunger and maladies (very few of them were still alive), the subjects then asked Bhīshma—in vain—to ascend the throne; "when Pāṇḍu became king, his sons must obtain their paternal inheritance" (V, 147). Droṇa had related the life of Pāṇḍu. Vidura had asked Bhīshma to go to the woods with him and Dhṛtarāshtra, or to bind Duryodhana and rule the kingdom with the Pāṇḍavas. Gāndhārī proved that the kingdom by right belonged to the Pāṇḍavas and their sons and grandsons, and to no others (V, 148). Dhṛtarāshtra had repeated to Duryodhana the genealogy of the Kuru race from Soma, mentioning especially that Yayāti (δ) had placed his youngest son Paru on the throne; and that Devāpi's installation was forbidden by the brahmins and all aged persons because of a skin disease (leprosy, Nil.), and as Bāhlika abandoned his father and brother and obtained the wealthy kingdom of his maternal uncle, Çantana, the youngest of the three brothers, became king. "Being defective of a limb, I was likewise excluded by Pāṇḍu; at his death the kingdom must pass to his sons . . . thou art not the son of a king, and therefore hast no right to the kingdom" (V, 149). Kṛṣṇa continued his relation; Duryodhana had repeatedly instructed the kings, saying: "To-day is Pushya [in conjunction with the moon]; march ye." "Eleven akṣauhīṇis have been assembled headed by Bhīṣma (with the device of the palmyra in his banner)" (V, 150).

[Bhāṅgāsvanopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Bhāṅgāsvana"). § 728b (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhīshma said: In days of yore lived R.-r. Bhāṅgāsvana, who, being childless, from desire of obtaining issue performed the Agnishṭuta, that is disliked by Indra, but is approved of by men desirous of offspring, in order to purge themselves of their sins (prāyaścittas, v. the note of PCR., p. 44). He had 100 sons. Indra began to look for an occasion against him. Once, on a hunting expedition, he was bewildered by Indra, and, afflicted with thirst, he plunged into a lake after having caused his horse to drink, and found himself changed into a woman. He took leave of his wives and children and retired to the woods, joined an ascetic and bore him 100 sons, whom he took to his former children, and made them all enjoy the kingdom as their joint property. Filled with rage, Indra, in the form of a brahman, repaired to Bhāṅgāsvana's capital, and, referring them to the example of the gods and the Asuras (the children of Kaçyapa), caused the half-brothers to slay each other. Then, in the form of a brahman, he came to the spot where Bhāṅgāsvana lived as an ascetic lady, afflicted with grief, and told him that he was Indra, and why he was angry, but was gratified and granted him a boon. He asked that those sons of his should revive that were born by him as a woman, because the affection entertained by a woman is much greater than that which is entertained by a man. Indra revived all his children, and told him to choose whichever sex he liked, that of woman or that of man. He chose to remain a woman, because in sexual intercourse the pleasure that women enjoy is always much greater than what is enjoyed by men. Indra proceeded to heaven (XIII, 12).

[Bhava-Bhārgava-samāgama(h)] ("the meeting of Çiva and Uçanas"). § 701b (Mokshadh.): Bhāshya said: Uçanas became engaged in doing what was disagreeable to the gods for an adequate cause (v. the note of PCR., p. 524). Kubera, the chief of Y. and Rā., is the lord of the treasury of Indra. Uçanas, by yoga, entered Kubera, and deprived him of his liberty and robbed him of all his wealth. Kubera repaired to Çiva, who prepared to slay Uçanas with his lance. Uçanas placed himself on the point of Çiva's lance. Çiva bent the lance with his hand (pāṇinī samandamayāt), whence it was called Pināka, and threw Uṣanas into his mouth and swallowed him, and Uṣanas began to wander there. Mahadeva entered the waters and remained there like an immovable stake of wood for millions of years. Then he rose from the mighty lake and Brahma approached him. Īva saw that Uṣanas within his stomach (Nil.) had become greater in consequence of those penances of his. He once more betook himself to yoga-meditation. Uṣanas, filled with anxiety, began to wander within his stomach, and to sing his praises; but Rudra had stopped all his outlets; at last he let him go out through his urethra. Thence he came to be called Īkra, and became unable to attain the central point of the firmament. Uma prevented Īva from slaying him, and Uṣanas became her son (XII, 290).

Bhīmakadalikhaṇḍapraveça (h) (Bhīma's entering the plantain thicket). § 424 (cf. Tīrthayātrāp.): There they dwelt for six nights. Suddenly a wind from the north-east brought a celestial lotus of 1,000 petals, which Kṛṣṇa presented to Yudhisṭhira; she sent Bhīma to bring others, in order to carry them to their hermitage in Kāmyaka. Bhīma proceeded along the slopes of the Gandhamādāna (b); the lions, etc., fled; invisible, the wives of Yakṣas and Gandharvas stared at him. After having bathed in a lake, he blew his shell and began to proceed into a plantain wood, but was arrested by his brother the ape Hanumat, who for his good obstructed the way to heaven (divāgamaṃ mārgam), saying that this was the path to the devaloka, impassable by mortals, save the way of siddhi (siddhigatiṃ) (III, 146). Hanumat said he was suffering from illness and could not rise; but Bhīma would not leap over him, and could not remove his tail.—§§ 425–430: Hanumat-Bhīma-samvāda (q.v.).

Bhimasenarasapāna(m) ("Bhīma's drinking the magic draught"). § 197 (Sambhāvap.): The Pāṇḍavas were far superior in strength and skill to the Dhṛtarāshṭras, and Bhīma tormented the Dhṛtarāshṭras. Duryodhana then built a palace (Uḍakakṛīḍana) at Pramāṇakoṭi, on the banks of the Gaṅgā, in order to sport in the water there. There he invited the Pāṇḍavas and poured kākakūṭaka poison into the food of Bhīma, and when Bhīma had lost his senses, Duryodhana bound him and threw him into the water, where he sunk down to the dwelling of the Nāgas, who bit him, but could not penetrate his thick skin. The immovable (i.e. vegetable) kākakūṭaka poison was neutralised by the movable (i.e. animal) serpent poison. Bhīma awoke and began to crush the serpents, until Vāsuki came, and, informed by Āryaka that he was the daughter's son of Āryaka's daughter's son, let him drink as much of their rasa (containing the strength of 1,000 elephants (serpents?) in each kuṇḍa) as he could. He drank eight kuṇḍas, and then was laid on a bed (I, 128). When the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas had returned to Hāstinapura, Yudhishtira ("himself unacquainted with wickedness, and regarding others as honest as himself," v. 5037) asked Kuntī if Bhīma had come home. Vidura consoled her. On the eighth day Bhīma awoke from his slumber, bathed in the holy waters, ate of the paramāṇna (rice boiled in milk with sugar), etc., and was placed by the Nāgas in the same gardens, whence he ran home. Yudhishtira ordered him to keep silence on this accident, and the Pāṇḍavas [with Vidura's advice] became very vigilant from this day (the words in brackets are from B., where also v. 5068a is placed after v. 5070a). [sārathim cānya dayitam apahastena jaghnivān (see Bk., s.v. apahasta, cf. iii, v. 545). Duryodhana again poured kākakūṭaka poison into the food of Bhīma. Yuyutu informed the Pāṇḍavas of this; but Bhīma swallowed the poison and digested it, and it produced no change in him.]—Duryodhana, Karṇa, and Çakuni had recourse to numerous other contrivances in order to kill the Pāṇḍavas, who, though knowing it, yet, in accordance with the advice of Vidura, suppressed their indignation. Seeing the princes passing their time in play, Dhṛtarāshṭra appointed Gautama (i.e. Kṛpa, born in a thickot of reeds and well skilled in the meaning of the Vedas and çāstras) as their preceptor (I, 129).

Bhishmakātmajā = Rukmiṇī: V, 575.

Bhishmanihantr ("the slayer of Bhishma") = Çikhaṇḍin: X, 381 (slain by Açvatthāman).

Bhishmaparvan ("the section treating of Bh°"). § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 89 (°mahācūkho . . . Bhāratadrumaḥ). —§ 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 519 (vicitrārtham), 528 (contains 5884 śloka—in reality only 5856).—§ 795c (Mahābhārata): VIII, 6, 271 (donations to be given to the brahmins when reciting Bh°).

Bhishma-Satyavati-samvāda(h) ("conversation of Bh° and S."). § 168 (of Vicitraviryoparvan): Satyavati in vain asked Bhishma to ascend the throne and marry the widows of Vicitravirya, in order to propagate the race (I, 103). Bhishma adduced the examples of Paraçu-Rāma (§ 169) and of Dirghatamas (§ 170).—§ 171: "Thus many kshatriyas have sprung from the seed of brahmins." Vyāsa raised offspring in the widows of Vicitravirya (v. Vicitravirya-sutotpatti, § 171).

Bhishmasya Svargārohaṇika(m) parva(n). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 353.

Bhishmavadha ("the slaying of Bh°"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 338 (°aḥ parva, i.e. Bhishmavadhaparvan).

[Bhishmavadhaparvan] ("the section relating to the slaying of Bhishma," the 70th of the minor parvas of Mhbh.; cf. Bhishmavadha). § 577: Beholding Arjuna again taking up the Gāṇḍīva, the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas were filled with joy and blow their conches, etc. D., G., P., Si., Cā., and R. came with Indra in order to behold the fight. Putting off his coat of mail, etc., Yudhishtira, followed by his brothers (α) (who did not know his intentions) and Kṛṣṇa, proceeded on foot, with joined hands, to Bhishma, etc. (β), one after another, and asked their permission to fight. He also inquired about the means of vanquishing Bhishma and Droṇa, and as they said that they were invincible he asked them to indicate the means of killing them. They gave the permission, said they would pray for his victory, though they were bound by the wealth of the Kurus to fight for them. Bhishma said that his time of death had not yet come, he must come to see him once more. Droṇa said that if he did not give himself up to death and drop his weapons nobody would be able to slay him; he would drop his arms if he heard something very disagreeable from someone whose speech was trustworthy. Kṛpa said he was incapable of being slain. Çalya renewed his promise to weaken the energy of Karna. When the Kauravas saw Yudhishtira, they contemned him, believing that he had come in terror. Kṛṣṇa endeavoured to bring Karna over to the Pāṇḍavas, as long as Bhishma was not slain, but in vain. Yudhishtira exclaimed, "He who chooses us, him we will choose for our ally"; Yuyutsu went over to the Pāṇḍavas, and Yudhishtira said that the propagation of Dhṛtarāṣṭra's lineage and his çrāddha oblations rested on him. The Mlecchas and Aryans wept for joy at the behaviour of the Pāṇḍavas, and blew their conches, etc. (VI, 43).—§ 578: THE FIRST DAY'S ENCOUNTER: Duḥçāsana advanced with his troops with Bhishma at their head, and the Pāṇḍavas headed by Bhīmasena, who roared frightfully. Duryodhana, etc. (α), attacked Bhīmasena. The Draupadeyas, etc. (β), rushed against the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. The disciples of Droṇa always hit the mark (VI, 44). (1) Bhishma attacked Arjuna; (2) Satyaki attacked Kṛtavarma; (3) Abhimanyu fought with Bṛhadbala; (4) Bhīmasena struggled with Duryodhana; (5) Duḥçāsana fought with Nakula; (6) Durmukha fought with Sahadeva; (7) Yudhishtira fought with the Madra king (Çalya); (8)

Dhṛṣṭadyumna attacked Droṇa; (9) Çaikha encountered Somadatta's son; (10) Dhṛṣṭaketu (the king of the Codis) encountered Bāhika, they looked like the planets Angāraka (Mars) and Budha (Mercury); (11) Ghaṭotaka encountered Alambusha; (12) Çikhaṇḍin encountered Açvatthāman; (13) Virāṭa attacked Bhagadatta; (14) Kṛpa attacked the Kaikaya king Bṛhatkhattra; (15) Drupada attacked the Sindhu king Jayadratha, they resembled the planets Çukra (Venus) and Angāraka (Mars); (16) Vikarna (son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra) attacked Sutasoma; (17) Cekitāna, who sided with the Pāṇḍavas, attacked Suçarman; (18) Çakuni attacked Prativindhya; (19) Çrutakarman (the son of Sahadeva) attacked the Kāmboja king Sudakṣiṇa, and stood like the Mainaka mountain; (20) Irdvat (son of Arjuna) attacked Çrutāyus; (21) the two princes of Avanti, Vinda and Anuvinda, encountered Kuntibhoja with his son; (22) the Kekaya-brothers encountered the five Gāndhāra-princes; (23) Virabahu (son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra) encountered Uttara (the son of Virāṭa); (24) The Codi king attacked Ulūka. Thousands of single combats took place. D., P., Si., and Cā. beheld the battle, which resembled the combat of D. and As. (VI, 45). The Pāṇḍavas and the Kurus fought as if they were possessed by demons. The divisions of the Pāṇḍavas, approaching Bhishma (b), began to yield (VI, 46). (25) After the greater part of the forenoon had worn out, Durmukha, etc. (γ), began to protect Bhishma, who rushed upon the Codis, etc. (δ). (26) Then Abhimanyu (e) attacked Bhishma, Kṛtavarma, Çalya, Durmukha (cutting off the head of his charioteer), and Kṛpa (cutting in two his bow); he was regarded as equal to Arjuna, and his bow sent forth a twang like that of the Gāṇḍīva; he stood firm like the Mainaka mountain. When Bhishma's standard fell down, Bhīma shouted. Bhishma used celestial weapons. (27) In order to protect Abhimanyu, Virāṭa, etc. (c), attacked Bhishma, who wounded Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Satyaki, and they cut off the standard of Bhīmasena (d), who wounded Bhishma and Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma. (28) Mounted on an elephant, Uttara (the son of Virāṭa) attacked the Madra king Çalya, whose steeds were killed by the elephant; Çalya, with a dart, deprived Uttara of his senses, and mounted the chariot of Kṛtavarma. (29) Seeing his brother Uttara slain and Çalya staying with Kṛtavarma, Çveta (the son of Virāṭa) attacked Çalya. (30) The Kosala king Bṛhadbala, etc. (ζ), attacked Çveta in order to protect Çalya; Çveta wounded Rukmaratha, who was borne away by his charioteer. (31) Then Duryodhana, with Bhishma, etc., attacked Çveta and rescued Çalya; Bhishma shot at Abhimanyu, etc. (η) (VI, 47). The Pāṇḍavas, with Çikhaṇḍin, desired to rescue the generalissimo Çveta and attacked Bhishma. The Kurus retreated from fear, and abandoned Bhishma. (32) Duryodhana averted Çveta from Bhishma, and was routed; (33) Çveta once more attacked Bhishma, whose standard he cut down; (34) then Bāhika, etc. (θ), attacked Çveta in order to protect Bhishma, whose chariot Çveta reduced to ashes, with standard, etc.; (35) Çalya, etc., rushed to Bhishma's rescue; a voice in the skies admonished Bhishma to hasten the death of Çveta. (36) Satyaki, etc. (κ), rushed to the rescue of Çveta. Bhishma, etc. (λ), checked them. With a shaft endued with the force of the Brahma weapon, seen by D., G., P., U., and Bā., Bhishma shot Çveta to death. The Pāṇḍavas (with Çikhaṇḍin) lamented; the Kurus rejoiced; Duḥçāsana danced for joy. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa withdrew the troops, the same did the Kurus (VI, 48). (37) When Çveta had been slain, Virāṭa's son Çaṅkha, on beholding Çalya standing with Kṛtavarma, attacked Çalya; (38) Bhishma attacked Çaṅkha; (39) Arjuna placed himself in front of Çaṅkha and attacked Bhishma; (40) Çalya, mace in hand, slew the steeds of Çaṅkha, who mounted Arjuna's chariot. (41) Bhishma with his arrows slaughtered the Pañcāla hosts, etc. (μ), abandoned Arjuna, and attacked Drupada. The Pāṇḍavas were routed, the sun set, and the Pāṇḍavas withdrew their forces (VI, 49). Seeing Bhishma's (and Droṇa's) prowess, Yudhishtira complained before Kṛṣṇa, and spoke of retiring into the woods. Bhīma alone, he said, fought in accordance with kāhattṛiya duties; Arjuna was indifferent. Kṛṣṇa consoled him, saying that he had got Satyaki, etc. (ν), and that Çikhaṇḍin was certainly the slayer of Bhishma. Yudhishtira then addressed Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, saying that he himself and Bhīma, etc. (ξ), would follow him. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna said that he had been appointed by Çambhu to slay Droṇa and to fight against Bhishma, etc. (ο). Yudhishtira recommended the array called Krauc̥cāruṇa, which Br̥haspati had explained to Indra in days of old, when the gods and the Asuras fought, but which had never been seen before. When morning dawned, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna placed Arjuna (ο) in the van of the army, and Drupada became the head [of the array], etc. (π) (VI, 50). Seeing the Krauc̥ca of the Pāṇḍavas, Duryodhana, approaching Bhishma, etc. (ρ), gladdened them all, saying that their army, which was protected by Bhishma, was immeasurable, while that of the Pāṇḍavas, protected by Bhīma, was measurable. The Samsthānas, etc. (σ), should protect Bhishma. Bhishma, Droṇa, and the Dh̥rtarāṣṭras formed a mighty array. Bhishma was followed by Droṇa with the Kuntalas, etc. (τ). Çakuni protected Droṇa. Followed by his brothers and the Açvatthāmas, etc. (υ), Duryodhana advanced against the Pāṇḍava host. Bh̥riçravas, etc. (φ), protected the left flank; Somadatta, etc. (χ), the right; Açvatthāman, etc. (ψ), were in the rear; behind them Kotumat, etc. (ω). Bhishma and the others blew their conches, etc. Kṛṣṇa, etc. (αα), blew their conches (Kṛṣṇa blew Pañcājanya, etc.). The Kurus and Pāṇḍavas marched against each other in order to renew the battle (VI, 51). — § 579: SECOND DAY: Duryodhana began the battle. (1) Bhishma shot at Abhimanyu, etc. (α); Arjuna told Kṛṣṇa to take his chariot before Bhishma; "protected by Bhishma, Droṇa, etc. (β), will slaughter the Pañcālas." Only Bhishma, Droṇa, and Karna could encounter Arjuna. Bhishma was protected by Saindhava (i.e. Jayadratha), etc. (γ). Bhishma, etc. (δ), struck Arjuna, who struck Bhishma, etc. (ε). Satyaki, etc. (ζ), surrounded Arjuna. (2) The Pañcāla prince and the Somakas attacked Droṇa. (3) Bhishma fought with Arjuna, at the request of Duryodhana, who complained of the absence of Karna; Açvatthāman, etc. (η), stood for battle; Bhishma wounded Kṛṣṇa; D., G., Cā., and great R. said they would be invincible by all the worlds with D., As., and G. (4) See 2 (VI, 52): Continuation of the combat between Droṇa and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna. (5) Bhīma attacked Droṇa in order to aid Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, whom he caused to be taken up on another chariot. (6) Urged by Duryodhana, the Kalinga king rushed against Bhīma in order to protect Droṇa. (7) Droṇa abandoned Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and encountered Virāṭa and Drupada. (8) Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna proceeded to support Yudhishtira. (9) See 6 (VI, 53): Bhīmasena was supported by the Cedis; the Kalinga king by Kotumat (son of the Nishada king; rājaputra, v. 2354) and Çrutayus. The Cedis, etc. (θ), attacked the Nishadas. (10) The Cedis left Bhīmasena and turned back; the Kalinga king and his son Çakradera fought with Bhīma, who slew Çakradera with his mace. (11) Bhīma attacked Bhānumat (the prince of the Kalingas), and slew him with his sword, dividing him in the middle, and made a great slaughter of men and elephants. (12) Beholding Çrutayus (the ruler of the Kalingas) at the head of the Kalinga troops, Bhīmasena attacked him, was wounded, and taken into his chariot by the charioteer Açoka; once more he fought with Çrutayus, and slew him, and Satyadeva, and Satya, and Kotumat, and routed the Kalingas. (13) When, however, the Kalingas were rallied again, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, with Çikhaṇḍin, Yudhishtira, etc., protected one of the wings of Bhīmasena; there was nobody on earth, save Bhīma and Satyaki, who was dearer to Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna than his very life; they beheld Satyaki at a distance; and that [grand] son of Çini took up the wing of both Bhīma and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Bhīma caused a bloody river to flow there. (14) Bhishma heard the cries, attacked Bhīma, and was attacked by Satyaki, etc. (ι). Bhishma jumped from his chariot, mace in hand, and was taken by Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna on his chariot. Satyaki slew the charioteer of Bhishma, who was then carried away from the field of battle by his steeds. The Kalingas were totally routed by Bhīma, who was praised by the Pañcālas and Matsyas, himself embraced Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, and was congratulated by Satyaki, who returned to his own chariot and began to slay the Kurus (VI, 54). (15) When the forenoon of that day had passed away, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna engaged in battle with Açvatthāman, etc. (κ); he slew the steeds of Açvatthāman, who got up on Çalya's car. (16) Abhimanyu quickly came up and wounded Çalya, etc. (λ), but was, in his turn, wounded by Açvatthāman, etc. (μ). (17) Lakshmana (the son of Duryodhana) attacked Abhimanyu. (18) Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu in order to aid Lakshmana. (19) Arjuna engaged in battle with the Kurus, headed by Bhishma and Droṇa; dust and Abhimanyu's arrows produced complete darkness. The Kurus were routed. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa blew their conches. Bhishma suggested to Droṇa that they should withdraw the troops, and as the sun set both armies were withdrawn (VI, 55). — § 580: THIRD DAY: (1) Next morning Bhishma formed a Garuda array; at its beak was Bhishma himself; its eyes were formed by Droṇa and Kṛtavarma; Açvatthāman, etc. (α), were at its head; Bh̥riçravas, etc. (β), were placed in its nock; at its back was Duryodhana and his followers; Vinda, etc. (γ), formed its tail; the Magadhas, etc. (δ), formed the right wing; the Kārashas, etc. (ε), were stationed in the left wing. (2) Arjuna and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna formed an array in the shape of a half-moon, with Bhīmasena in the right horn, etc. (ζ); next to Nila Dhr̥ṣṭakotu, etc. (η); in the middle was Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (θ); on the left horn was he who had Kṛṣṇa for his protector. Then the battle commenced (VI, 56). (3) Arjuna fought with the Kauravas, who could not be broken, as they were protected by Droṇa; and the Pāṇḍavas could not be broken, as they were protected by Arjuna and Bhīma. At last Bhishma, etc. (ι), broke the ranks of the Pāṇḍavas. Bhīmasena, etc. (κ), attacked the Kauravas and fought with Duryodhana, Bhishma, and Droṇa; Abhimanyu and Satyaki attacked Çakuni (VI, 57). D., Dā., G., Pç., U., and Rā. outgazed Arjuna. (4) The Gāndhāras, with Çakuni, fought with Satyaki (the Vṛṣṇi hero) and Abhimanyu, and destroyed the chariot of Satyaki, who mounted Abhimanyu's chariot. (5) Droṇa and Bhishma attacked Yudhishtira, and were attacked by him and the sons of Madrī. (6) Bhīmasena and Ghaṣṭakasa fought with Duryodhana, who was brought away by his charioteer, and his troops fled, pursued by Bhishma. (7) Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and Yudhishtira slew Droṇa's and Bhishma's army, which fled and could not be checked by Bhishma and Droṇa. (8) Abhimanyu and Çainreya began to slaughter the army of Çakuni. (9) Arjuna routed the Kaurava army, and its flight could not be checked by Bhishma and Droṇa, but was checked by Duryodhana, who blamed Bhishma, saying that he did not sincerely fight with the Pāṇḍavas, otherwise his troops could not have been routed while Bhishma, etc. (λ), were alive; had he known this unwillingness of Bhishma to fight, he would have consulted Karna. Bhishma said that the Pāṇḍavas were incapable of being vanquished by the very gods, including Indra, but he alone would check them to-day (VI, 58). (10) After the forenoon of that day had passed away, Bhishma attacked the Pāṇḍavas, and a dreadful battle ensued, in which the Pāṇḍavas were routed. Kṛṣṇa told Arjuna to strike Bhishma, reminding him of his vow to slay all the warriors of Dhṛtarāṣṭra's son, headed by Bhishma and Droṇa. At the request of Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa drove the steeds to where Bhishma was, and the army of Yudhishtira rallied for battle. Arjuna and Bhishma fought; Kṛṣṇa displayed great skill in driving the horses; he and Arjuna were both wounded by Bhishma, and the Pāṇḍava army was routed; Bhishma ordered Droṇa, etc. (μ), to attack Arjuna. (11) The grandson of Çini came to Arjuna's rescue; Kṛṣṇa applauded him, and, saying that he would slay Bhishma and Droṇa, etc., he jumped down from the chariot with his discus Sudarçana in his hand, and rushed towards Bhishma (who welcomed him), but was held back by Arjuna, who said that he would himself slay the Kurus; he was then prevailed upon to mount the chariot once more, where he blew the Pañcājanya, while arrows were shot from the Gāṇḍīva in all directions. (12) Then Duryodhana, etc. (ν), attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Mahendra weapon and checked the Kaurava host. (13) Virāṭa, Drupada, etc., approached. Arjuna caused a river of blood to flow there with Rākṣasas on its banks. Elated with victory, the Cedis, etc. (ξ), set up a loud shout. The Kurus, including Bhishma, etc. (ο), got afraid of the Indra-weapon, and withdrew their forces at sunset. The same did Arjuna. Among the Kurus there was a great uproar: "The Sauvīras, etc. (π), have all been slain by Arjuna, and he has vanquished Çrutāyus, etc. (ρ)" (VI, 59). — § 581: THE FOURTH DAY: (1) When the night had passed away, Bhishma at the head of the army proceeded against the foe, surrounded by Droṇa, etc. (α). The array of the Pāṇḍavas was like that of the day before. Bhishma (β) attacked Arjuna, and so did Droṇa, etc. (β); Abhimanyu rushed out of the ranks and proceeded against all the foes, but Bhishma avoided Abhimanyu and fought against Arjuna himself (VI, 60). (2) Açvatthāman, etc. (γ), fought with Abhimanyu. (3) Urged by Duryodhana, the Trigartas, etc. (δ), attacked Arjuna and Abhimanyu. (4) Proceeding towards Arjuna, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna attacked the Madras, etc. (ε), and slew Samyaman's son (VI, 61). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna fought with Çalya. (5) Abhimanyu attacked Çalya. Duryodhana, etc. (ζ), protected the chariot of Çalya. Bhīmasena, etc. (η), fought with them. (6) Bhīmasena, with his mace, attacked Duryodhana, who advanced with the Magadha-division, and placing the ruler of Magadha before himself, Bhīmasena jumped from his chariot and slew the elephants with his mace; the Draupadeyas, etc. (θ), protected Bhīma's rear; Abhimanyu slew the Magadha king after having slain his elephant (VI, 62). (7) Duryodhana commanded his entire army to slay Bhīmasena, who crushed them with his mace, without being abandoned by Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ι). (8) Bhishma attacked Bhīmasena. (9) Satyaki (Çinipravīra) attacked Bhishma. (10) Only the Rā. Alambusha fought with the grandson of Çini. (11) Only Somadatta's son Bhūriçravas was then of good cheer; he attacked Satyaki (VI, 63). (12) Duryodhana and his brothers surrounded Somadatta's son; Bhīmasena encountered the Dhṛtarāṣṭras, who were headed by Duryodhana; Nandaka (Dhṛtarāṣṭra) also attacked Bhīmasena, who addressed his charioteer Viçoka, that he should drive the steeds with care; Duryodhana also wounded Viçoka; Duryodhana struck Bhīmasena so that he swooned away. (13) The Pāṇḍava army, headed by Abhimanyu, showered arrows on Duryodhana; Bhīmasena regained consciousness and fought against Duryodhana and Çalya, who was borne away from the battle. (14) Fourteen Dhṛtarāṣṭras, viz. Senāpati, etc. (κ), encountered Bhīmasena, who slew Senāpati, etc. (λ); the remaining six fled. (15) Urged by Bhishma, the whole Dhṛtarāṣṭra army attacked Bhīmasena; the Prāgyjyotiṣa king Bhagadatta, on a huge elephant, struck Bhīmasena, who fell in a swoon. (16) Then the Rā. Ghaṭotkaca, by help of his illusive force, appeared riding on an Airāvata, followed by the other Dig-nāgas (μ), each with four tusks and mounted by Rākṣasas, and attacked Bhagadatta's elephant. (17) Bhishma urged Droṇa and Duryodhana to rescue Bhagadatta; all the kings, headed by Droṇa, proceeded to aid Bhagadatta; Yudhishtira, with the Pāñcūlas and Pāṇḍavas, pursued them from behind; Ghaṭotkaca uttered a fierce roar; Bhishma, addressing Droṇa, caused the army to withdraw, and so did the Pāṇḍavas with Bhīmasena and Ghaṭotkaca. Duryodhana was afflicted with sorrow (VI, 64). Dhṛtarāṣṭra complained to Saṁjaya, and asked what was the cause of the victory of the Pāṇḍavas. Saṁjaya explained that victory sides with righteousness, and related how Duryodhana in the night had enquired of Bhishma, on whom the Pāṇḍavas were relying to vanquish Droṇa, etc. (ν). Bhishma had related this ancient history: In days of old all the gods and Rahis were assembled by Brahmān upon Gandhamādāna; and when Brahmān, together with the Rahis and gods, beheld an excellent chariot in the sky, he hymned Nārāyaṇa (ξ). " . . . Therefore take birth in the race of Yadu and slay the sons of Diti . . . Having created the divine Sankarṣaṇa out of thy own self by thyself, thou didst then, O Kṛṣṇa, create thyself as Pradyumna, born of thyself; from Pradyumna thou didst then create Aniruddha, who is known as the eternal Vishṇu; and it was Aniruddha who created me as Brahmān, the upholder of the Universe. Created out of Vāsudeva, I have therefore been created by thee. Dividing thyself into portions, take birth among human beings, and slaughtering the Asuras there . . . thou wilt again truly attain to Yoga . . ." (VI, 65). Requested by D., R., and G., Brahmān explained to them who Nārāyaṇa is. "Those Dai. and Dā. and Rā. who were slain in battle have been born among men." The old Rahis Nara and Nārāyaṇa are Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa should never be disregarded as if he were a man. This was heard by Bhishma from Rahis, etc. (ο). "Never go to war with Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas; on account of thy folly thou couldst not apprehend this; I regard thee, therefore, as a wicked Rākṣasa." "Where Kṛṣṇa is, there is righteousness; and victory is where righteousness is . . . It is Kṛṣṇa who always imparts an understanding endued with righteousness and strength in battle to the Pāṇḍavas, and who always protects them from danger . . . He it is who, towards the close of the Dvāpara yuga and the beginning of the Kali yuga, is hymned by Saṅkarahana according to the Sātvata ritual" (VI, 66). Bhishma, on the authority of Markaṇḍeya, declared the origin and glory of Kṛṣṇa, his deeds and creations, to Duryodhana (α) (VI, 67). Bhishma cited a hymn to Nārāyaṇa, uttered by Brahmān himself, and communicated in days of old by B.-ṛ. and G. on earth. Brahmān, who quoted Nārada, etc. (ρ), hymned Nārāyaṇa as the god of D., S., etc. (σ) (VI, 68).—§ 582: FIFTH DAY: After the night had passed away, Bhishma proceeded in a Makara array, the Pāṇḍavas in a Çyena array, in whose beak, etc., was Bhīmasena, etc. (α). (1) Bhīmasena, penetrating the Makara array through its mouth, attacked Bhishma; the Pāṇḍavas were confounded. (2) Then Arjuna attacked Bhishma. (3) Duryodhana addressed Droṇa, who attacked Sātyaki (the grandson of Çini). (4) Bhīmasena attacked Droṇa in order to protect Sātyaki. (5) Droṇa, etc. (β), attacked Bhīmasena. (6) Abhimanyu and the Draupadēyas attacked the Kurus; Çikhaṇḍin attacked Bhishma and Droṇa; Bhishma avoided him. (7) Urged by Duryodhana, Droṇa protected Bhishma; Çikhaṇḍin avoided Droṇa. (8) Duryodhana protected Bhishma, who was attacked by the Pāṇḍavas with Arjuna at their head (VI, 69). An awful carnage ensued. (9) Duryodhana and the Kāliṅgas placed Bhishma at their head and attacked the Pāṇḍavas; the Pāṇḍavas, supporting Bhīma, attacked Bhishma (VI, 70). Arjuna (δ) attacked Bhishma with the Gāṇḍīva (ε); the Kurus were afraid and seemed to melt away. (10) Then, with steeds of the Kūmboja breed, the Kāliṅga king, etc. (γ), surrounded Çakuni. Bhishma, etc., fought with Arjuna, etc. (δ); Drupada, etc. (ι), fought with Droṇa; Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma attacked Dhṛṣṭadyumna (VI, 71). Arjuna encountered Droṇa, etc. (ξ). Sātyaki, etc. (η), attacked Çalva and the Kaikēyas. Dhṛṣṭaketu and Ghaṭotkaca attacked the chariot-division of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. Bhishma checked Bhīmasena. Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) attacked Bhishma, but had his charioteer slain. Bhishma slew the Pāṇḍava forces; but the Pāṇḍavas and the Somakas again attacked Bhishma. (11) Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc., attacked Bhishma; Bhishma, Droṇa, etc., attacked the Pāṇḍavas (VI, 72).

Abhimanyu attacked Citrāsena, etc. (θ). (12) Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu, and so did Lakṣmaṇa (grandson of Dhṛtarāṣṭra), who had his steeds and charioteer slain, and was carried away by Kṛpa on his chariot. The Śrījāyas fought with the Kurus with their fists; Bhishma slew the troops of the Pāṇḍavas with his celestial weapons (VI, 73). (13) Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) slew innumerable foes with his arrows; Duryodhana despatched 10,000 chariots against him, but he destroyed them all with his celestial weapons. Sātyaki & Bhūriçravas (δ); Sātyaki's combatants fled and abandoned him; ten sons of Yuyudhāna & Bhūriçravas (son of Bahlika's son Somadatta) towards the afternoon; Bhūriçravas slew them; Sātyaki & Bhūriçravas, each of them slew the other's chariot-steeds; Bhīmasena took Sātyaki up on his own chariot, and Duryodhana Bhūriçravas on his. (14) The Pāṇḍavas & Bhishma; Duryodhana urged 25,000 to slay Arjuna, who, however, slew them all. The Matṛyas and Kekayas surrounded Arjuna and Abhimanyu. At sunset Bhishma caused the troops to be withdrawn, and so did the Pāṇḍavas and the Śrījāyas (VI, 74).—§ 583: THE SIXTH DAY: After the night had passed away, the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas once more set out for battle. Yudhishtira caused Dhṛṣṭadyumna to dispose the troops in the Makara array: Drupada and Arjuna = head; Sahadeva and Nakula = two eyes; Bhīmasena = beak; Abhimanyu, etc. (α) = neck; Virāṭa and Dhṛṣṭadyumna = back; five Kekaya brothers = left wing; Dhṛṣṭaketu and Cekitāna = right wing; Kuntibhoja and Çatānika = two feet; Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (β) = tail. Bhishma disposed his army in the form of a huge crane: Droṇa = beak; Açvatthāman and Kṛpa = two eyes; Kṛtavarma, etc. (γ) = head; Çurāsena and Duryodhana = neck; the Prāgyotisha king, etc. (δ) = breast; the Prasthala king Sugarma = left wing; the Tusharas, etc. (ε) = right wing; Çrutāyus, etc. (ξ) = rear. The Pāṇḍava army was protected by Bhīmasena, etc. (η); the Kaurava army by Bhishma, etc. (θ). (1) Bhīmasena & Droṇa, who had his charioteer slain and then himself restrained his steeds. (2) Slaughtered by Droṇa and Bhishma, the Śrījāyas and Kekayas took to flight; and so did the Kauravas, mangled by Bhīma and Arjuna (VI, 75). Dhṛtarāṣṭra recounted the excellency of the Kaurava army, protected by Droṇa, etc. (ι). Neither men nor Rakhs of old ever behold such an army. That it should yet be slaughtered, he thought was due only to fate (or to the Creator); Vidura had spoken well, but the wicked Duryodhana would not accept (VI, 76). (3) Bhīmasena & the younger brothers of Duryodhana: Duḥçāsana, etc. (κ); Bhīma left his chariot and took up his mace. (4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna (forsaking Droṇa) proceeded towards Çakuni; seeing Bhīma's empty chariot, he became afflicted, but was comforted by the words of Viçoka; he took Bhīma, who was surrounded by foes on all sides, into his chariot. (5) The Dhṛtarāṣṭras (Duryodhana, etc.) & Dhṛṣṭadyumna (who applied the weapon Pramohana). (6) Droṇa & Drupada (who left the battle); the Somakas were struck with four. (7) Droṇa, with the weapon Prajñā, neutralized the Pramohana weapon in order to rescue Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons. (8) Yudhishtira sent the Kaikēyas, etc. (λ), headed by Abhimanyu, arrayed in a Sacimukha, to help Bhīma and Dhṛṣṭadyumna; Dhṛtarāṣṭra's troops were quite helpless, like a lady in the streets. (9) Dhṛṣṭadyumna, causing Bhīma to be taken into the chariot of the Kekaya king, attacked Droṇa, who slew his charioteer and steeds; Dhṛṣṭadyumna ascended the chariot of Abhimanyu; Droṇa broke the Pāṇḍava army (VI, 77). (10) Duryodhana & Bhīma (who ascended his own chariot); Bhīma & Citrāsena, etc. (11) Yudhishtira sent 12 chariot-warriors (Abhimanyu, etc.) to follow Bhīmasena from behind; seeing them, the Dhṛtarāṣṭras abandoned Bhīma. In the afternoon Duryodhana attacked Abhimanyu and Bhīmasena; Abhimanyu & Vikarna, who had his steeds slain and mounted on the chariot of Citrāsena; Abhimanyu & Durjaya and Vikarna; Duḥçāsana & the five Kekaya brothers; Draupadēyā & Duryodhana (VI, 78). Duryodhana (b) & Bhīmasena (who said that he, by slaying D., would dispel the sorrows of Kunti, etc.) (μ). (12) The Sindhu king came to the rescue of Duryodhana; Kṛpa caused Duryodhana to mount his own chariot; Jayadratha & Bhīmasena. (13) Dhṛṣṭaketu, etc. (ν), & the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Abhimanyu & Vikarna (who had his charioteer and steeds slain, and was himself pierced); Durmukha & Çrutakarman (who had his steeds slain); Sutasoma took Çrutakarman into his own chariot; Çrutakirti & Jayatsena (Dhṛtarāṣṭra); Çatānika & Jayatsena; Dushkarna & Çatānika, who slew Dushkarna; Çatānika was surrounded by foes. (14) The five Kekaya brothers & the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra: Durmukha, etc. (ξ). About sunset Bhishma broke the ranks of the Pāṇḍavas; and so did Yudhishthira, having smelt the heads of Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and Bhimasena (VI, 79). Duryodhana sought Bhishma in the night and gave expression to his grief at the success of the Pāṇḍavas; Bhishma promised to do his best, at which Duryodhana was delighted (VI, 80).—§ 584: THE SEVENTH DAY: Bhishma said to Duryodhana that he himself, etc. (a), were all prepared to battle for his sake; that the Pāṇḍavas could not be vanquished by the very gods including Indra, having Kṛṣṇa for their ally, etc.; but that he would either vanquish them or be vanquished by them. He gave Duryodhana a herb of great efficacy for healing his wounds. At dawn Bhishma disposed his troops in a Maṇḍala array (description), protected by Bhishma, who was again protected by Citrāsena, etc.; Duryodhana looked like Çakra himself. Then the *Dhrtarāṣṭra*s began to proceed, facing the west. Yudhishthira disposed his troops in a Vajra array. (1) Droṇa & the Matsya king; Açvatthāman & Çikhaṇḍin; Duryodhana & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Nakula and Sahadeva & the Madra king; Vinda and Anuvinda & Irāvāt; many kings & Arjuna; Bhimasena & Kṛtavarman Hārḍikya; Abhimanyu & Citrāsena, etc. (β) (sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra); Ghaṭotkaca & the Prāgyjyotiṣha king; Alambusha & Sātyaki; Bhāriçravas & Dhr̥ṣṭaketu; Yudhishthira & king Çrutāyus; Cekitāna & Kṛpa. Others proceeded against Bhima, and thousands against Arjuna, among others the Trigarta king with his brothers. D., D.-r., G., and U. wondered, beholding the two Kṛṣṇas (i.e. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna). Arjuna invoked the Aindra weapon; the foes fled, but were rescued by Bhishma (VI, 81). (2) After Suçarman had ceased fighting, and the Kuru army had been routed by Arjuna, and Bhishma had proceeded against the chariot of Arjuna, Duryodhana exhorted the kings and Suçarman to protect Bhishma, who resembled the planet Çakra (Venus) and was surrounded by the Trigartas. Droṇa & the Matsya king (Virāṭa), who mounted the chariot of Çaṅkha (his son), who was slain by Droṇa; Virāṭa fled. Çikhaṇḍin & Açvatthāman; Çikhaṇḍin descended, fought first with a sword, then mounted Sātyaki's chariot. Sātyaki & Alambusha; Sātyaki employed the Aindra weapon which he had obtained from Arjuna, and destroyed the creations of Alambusha's illusive power; Alambusha fled. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Duryodhana, who was forced to descend, mounted Çakuni's chariot. Kṛtavarman & Bhimasena; Kṛtavarman went to the chariot of Vṛshaka in the very sight of Çalya and Duryodhana (VI, 82). Dhrtarāṣṭra spoke to Saṅjaya about the cheerfulness of the Pāṇḍavas and the cheerlessness of the Kurus, which he thought was destiny. (3) In the forenoon: The two Avanti princes & Irāvāt (the daughter's son of the king of the Nāgas); Anuvinda mounted the chariot of Vinda; the horses ran away with the chariot. Ghaṭotkaca & Bhagadatta; D., G., and R. came there; except Ghaṭotkaca, the other Pāṇḍava warriors fled, but rallied. (4) The Prāgyjyotiṣha king & Ghaṭotkaca, who fled. The ruler of the Madras (Çalya) & the twins; Nakula must mount the chariot of Sahadeva; Çalya was borne away by his chariotcer (VI, 83). When the sun reached the meridian: Yudhishthira & Çrutāyus; D., G., and R. trembled; R. and D. prayed for the peace of the world; Çrutāyus fled, and the troops of Duryodhana turned away. Cekitāna & Kṛpa; Cekitāna was forced to descend, and took up a mace, and then a sword; Karakarṣa took Cekitāna into his chariot, and Çakuni took Kṛpa into his. Dhr̥ṣṭaketu & Bhāriçravas (the son of Somadatta); Dhr̥ṣṭaketu mounted the chariot of Çatāntika.

Citrāsena, etc. (γ), & Abhimanyu, who did not slay them, remembering Bhima's words. Arjuna caused Kṛṣṇa to direct the chariot against Bhishma; Arjuna & Suçarman (VI, 84); many were slain by Arjuna. (5) The Trigarta king and thirty-two others attacked Arjuna, who slew sixty (so C.) chariot-warriors, and sped to kill Bhishma. (6) The Trigarta king attacked Arjuna; Çikhaṇḍin, etc., came to his rescue; Arjuna shot at them with the Gāṇḍīva. (7) Duryodhana, with Jayadratha, etc., came to protect Bhishma against Arjuna, who, avoiding them, attacked Bhishma, as did also Yudhishthira, etc. (δ), avoiding the Madra king. Kṛpa, etc. (ε), shot at the Pāṇḍavas. Çikhaṇḍin fled, but, rebuked by Yudhishthira, who reminded him of his oath, he again attacked Bhishma. Çalya & Çikhaṇḍin, who employed the Vāruṇa weapon. Bhimasena (mace in hand) & Jayadratha; Citrāsena & Bhimasena (VI, 85); Citrāsena mounted on Vikarna's chariot. Bhishma & Yudhishthira (accompanied by the twins), who mounted Nakula's chariot. Yudhishthira urged the kings to slay Bhishma. Çikhaṇḍin & Bhishma, who disregarded him, remembering that he had formerly been a wife; the Sṛj̥j̥ayas & Bhishma. (8) Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and Sātyaki slaughter the Kuru army. (9) Vinda and Anuvinda attacked Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who mounted Sātyaki's chariot. (10) Yudhishthira attacked Vinda and Anuvinda, protected by Duryodhana. (11) Arjuna fought against many foes. (12) Droṇa began to consume the Pāñḍalas like fire a heap of cotton. (13) Duryodhana and his brothers surrounded Bhishma and fought against the Pāṇḍavas. At sunset Rā., Pç., etc., were seen all around. At sunset Arjuna (having vanquished Suçarman, etc.), Yudhishthira with his brothers, Bhimasena (having vanquished Duryodhana, etc.), Duryodhana (protecting Bhishma), Droṇa, etc., proceeded to their tents (VI, 86).—§ 585: THE EIGHTH DAY: Having passed the night, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas once more proceeded to battle. Duryodhana, etc. (a), formed the array, having Bhishma with the Mālavas, etc., in the van (β); next to him was Droṇa with the Pulindas, etc. (γ); next to Droṇa was Bhagadatta with the Magadhas, etc. (δ); behind him was the Kočala king Brhaddala with the Melukas, etc. (ε); next to him the Prasthala king Traigarta, etc. (ζ); next to the Trigarta king was Açvatthāman; next to him Duryodhana with the whole army and his brothers; behind him Kṛpa. Urged by Yudhishthira, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna formed a Çṛṅgaśaka array: Bhimasena and Sātyaki, etc. = the horns; next to them Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; Yudhishthira, etc. (η) = the centre; Abhimanyu, etc. (θ) = rear. Description of the battle. Bhishma & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (VI, 87). Yudhishthira & Bhishma. Bhimasena & Bhishma, who was protected by Duryodhana and his brothers; the steeds ran away with Bhishma; Bhimasena slew eight sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra: Sunabha, etc. (i). Then the other sons of Dhrtarāṣṭra all fled away. Duryodhana urged his brothers to kill Bhima. They remembered the words of Vidura. Duryodhana blamed Bhishma, who reminded him of the words of Droṇa, etc. (κ) (VI, 88). Dhrtarāṣṭra complained to Saṅjaya that his sons, though assisted by Droṇa, etc. (λ), were still slain; "What can be the reason save fate?" He regretted that the wicked Duryodhana had not obeyed Bhishma, etc. (μ). Saṅjaya said that Dhrtarāṣṭra ought to have restrained his sons from gambling. At noon the whole Pāṇḍava army, at the command of Yudhishthira—Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ν)—rushed against Bhishma alone. Arjuna, etc. (ξ), rushed against all the kings under the command of Duryodhana.

A third body was formed of Abhimanyu, etc. (α). Drona slew the Somakas and Srñjayas; Bhīmasena, principally the elephant division of the Kurus; Nakula and Sahadeva, the cavalry; the Pāṇḍavas were destroyed by Bhīshma, etc. (π) (VI, 89). Çakuni and Kṛtavarman Hārdikya attacked the Pāṇḍavas. With horses of the Kāmbuja, etc. (ρ), breed Arjuna's son Irāvāt (δ) attacked the Kauravas, and with his steeds brought about great confusion in their cavalry. Çakuni + his six brothers Gaja, etc. (σ), & Irāvāt, who slew them except Vṛshabha. Duryodhana urged Rakhyacṛṇga's son the Rā. (c) [Alambusha] (who hated Bhīmasena because he had killed Baka) to slay Irāvāt; both of them had recourse to magic; Nāgas came to the rescue of Irāvāt, but were consumed by a phantom in the form of Garuda; then Irāvāt became confounded and was slain by [Alambusha]. Arjuna, etc. (τ), slew many. Both armies fought as if they were all possessed by Rākshasas and demons (rakshobhūta; B. rakshobhūta) (VI, 90). Ghaṭotkaca, etc., & Duryodhana + the Vahga king with 10,000 elephants; Duryodhana slew four Rā.: Vaguvāt, etc. (υ); Ghaṭotkaca threatened Duryodhana with revenge for the exile of the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (φ) (VI, 91); the Vahga king, mounted on his elephant, placed himself between Ghaṭotkaca and Duryodhana; Ghaṭotkaca slew the elephant. Bhīshma sent Drona, etc. (χ), to the rescue of Duryodhana (VI, 92). Bhīma, urged by Yudhishtira, came to the rescue of Ghaṭotkaca, with Satyadhr̥ti, etc. (ψ). The Kurus left Ghaṭotkaca and fled (VI, 93). Duryodhana & Bhīmasena, who was wounded; Abhimanyu, etc., & Duryodhana; urged by Drona, Somadatta, etc. (ω), attacked the Pāṇḍavas; Drona & Bhīma; Nila & Açvatthāman; Açvatthāman & Ghaṭotkaca + many other Rā.; Drona & Rā.; Ghaṭotkaca confounded Açvatthāman by magic; the Kurus and Drona, etc. (αα), seemed to fly, etc.; then, towards sunset, the Kuru troops fled, notwithstanding the words of Sanjaya and Bhīshma (VI, 94). Duryodhana complained to Bhīshma that he had not himself been able to slay Ghaṭotkaca. Bhīshma said Duryodhana should always battle with Yudhishtira, etc. (ββ), while Bhīshma, etc. (γγ), would battle against Ghaṭotkaca; or Bhagadatta should fight against Ghaṭotkaca. Urged by Bhīma, Bhagadatta, on his elephant Supratika, set out against the foes. Bhagadatta & Bhīmasena (δ), etc. (δδ). Bhagadatta & the five Kekaya princes, etc. (εε); wounded by the Prāgyiṭiṣa king, the elephant of the Daçarṇa king fled; Ghaṭotkaca & Bhagadatta; D., G., and Munis wondered; Bhagadatta wounded Viçoka (Bhīma's charioteer); Bhīma descended, taking up his mace; Arjuna came; Duryodhana sent a division; Bhagadatta attacked Yudhishtira; Bhagadatta & the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ζζ); Bhīmasena told Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna about the slaughter of Irāvāt (VI, 95). Arjuna complained to Kṛṣṇa about Irāvāt's death; the killing of kinsmen, etc., quoting Vidura, etc. In the afternoon: Drona & Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons & Bhīmasena; Bhīshma, etc. (ηη), & Arjuna; Kṛtavarman + Bāhlika & Satyaki; Ambastha & Abhimanyu; Bhīma told Vyūḍhoraska, etc. (θθ). Then the other sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra fled. Ambastha got upon the chariot of Kṛtavarman. Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc., battled with the Kurus. When dark set in, both parties withdrew their armies (VI, 96). Duryodhana consulted Çakuni, etc. (ι), as to why Drona, etc. (κκ), did not resist the Parthas. Karna asked Duryodhana to see Bhīshma and solicit him to withdraw from the battle in order to permit Karna to fight the foe. Duryodhana set out for Bhīshma's tent (description), and asked Bhīshma to retire if he was not competent to slay the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (λλ) (VI, 97). Bhīshma spoke to Duryodhana about the invincibility of the Pāṇḍavas, mentioning the Khūṇḍara forest, etc. (μμ), and Kṛṣṇa (citing Nārada and other great R.); he promised to display all his valour on the next day; only Çikhandin—who was really Çikhandini—he would not slay. Duryodhana told Duhçāsana to let all their twenty-two divisions protect Bhīshma against Çikhandin, especially Çakuni, etc. (νν). Thus they proceeded to battle. “Yudhāmanyu protected Arjuna's left wheel, Uttamanjanja his right wheel, and Arjuna protected Çikhandin.” Arjuna told Dhṛṣṭadyumna to place Çikhandin before Bhīshma; he would himself be his protector (VI, 98).—§ 586: THE NINTH DAY: Bhīshma disposed his troops in a Sarvatobhadra array: Kṛpa, etc. (α), in the van; Drona, etc. (β), on the right wing; Açvatthāman, etc. (γ) = left wing; Duryodhana, etc. (δ), in the midst; Alambusha and Çrutāyus in the rear. Yudhishtira, etc. (ε), stood in the van; then there were Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ζ). The Kuru troops were headed by Bhīshma, the Pāṇḍava troops by Bhīmasena (VI, 99). Description of the heroism of Abhimanyu, confounding Kṛpa, etc. (η). Duryodhana despatched Alambusha to slay Abhimanyu, while they, headed by Bhīshma and Drona, would slay Arjuna. Alambusha & Abhimanyu; Alambusha slaughtered the Pāṇḍava host; the Draupadēyas (especially Prativindhya) & Alambusha (VI, 100). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sanjaya what was done by Alambusha, etc. (ο). Alambusha & Abhimanyu, who defeated him. Bhīshma & Abhimanyu, who slaughtered the Kaurava army. Arjuna (surrounded by the Pāṇḍavas) & Bhīshma (protected by Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons); Kṛpa & Arjuna; Satyaki & Kṛpa; Satyaki & Açvatthāman; Drona & Satyaki; Arjuna & Drona (VI, 101); Duryodhana despatched Suçarman to take up the wing of Drona; the Trigarta king (and his son) & Arjuna; D. and Dā. were highly gratified; Arjuna employed the Vāyavya weapon, Drona the Çaila weapon; the Trigarta division turned away; Duryodhana, etc. (ι), surrounded Arjuna; Bhagadatta, etc. (κ), surrounded Bhīma; Bhūriçravaṇa, etc. (λ), & the twins; Bhīshma (+ the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra) & Yudhishtira; Bhīmasena, with his mace, slaughtered the elephants. Duryodhana's troops fled (VI, 102). Bhīshma & the Somakas; Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (μ), & Bhīshma; the Draupadēyas, etc. (ν), & Bhīshma; the Kuru army protected Bhīshma, who slaughtered the Pāṇḍava army; the combatants censured Duryodhana, who urged Bhīshma, etc. (ξ), to fight (VI, 103). Arjuna slew all the followers of Suçarman; Duryodhana (+ Bhīshma) & Arjuna. At noon: Satyaki & Kṛtavarman; Drupada & Drona; Bhīmasena & Bāhlika; Abhimanyu & Citrāsena, who mounted the chariot of Durmukha; Drona & Drupada, who retreated; Bāhlika mounted the chariot of Lakṣmaṇa; Satyaki & Bhīshma; the Pāṇḍavas attacked Bhīshma in order to rescue Satyaki; battle between them and the Kurus (VI, 104). At the request of Duryodhana, Duhçāsana protected Bhīshma. Çakuni checked Nakula, etc. (ο). Duryodhana despatched 10,000 horsemen, who were checked by Yudhishtira, etc. (π). Duryodhana urged Çalya against Yudhishtira; Çalya & Yudhishtira, etc. (ρ); Bhīma came to the rescue of Yudhishtira. When the sun was sinking, there commenced a fierce and terrible battle (VI, 105). Bhīshma & Bhīma, etc. (σ). Drona & Satyaki (+ Bhīmasena). Bhīshma & the Sauviras, etc. (τ); Bhīshma & 14,000 Codis, etc. (υ), who were slain. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to slay Bhīshma (mentioning his words by Virāṭa). Arjuna & Bhīshma. Kṛṣṇa left his chariot, and rushed at Bhīshma, whip in hand, but was brought back by Arjuna (VI, 106). When the sun set, both parties withdrew their forces. The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (φ), sat down for a consultation about Bhishma; Kṛṣṇa said that Arjuna, etc. (χ), were invincible, mentioning Arjuna's words at Upaplavya (ψ). Yudhishtira proposed to go to Bhishma himself and ask him the means of his death. Kṛṣṇa approved of the proposal, and they went to the tent of Bhishma, who advised Arjuna to fight with him, placing Çikhaṇḍin before himself. Arjuna grieved at the prospect of striking Bhishma, but was reminded by Kṛṣṇa of his vow to slay Bhishma (the words of Bṛhaspati to Indra in days of old also being quoted). The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa went away with rejoicing hearts (VI, 107).—§ 587: THE TENTH DAY: Towards sunrise the Pāṇḍava army went out for battle, placing Çikhaṇḍin in their van; Bhīmasena and Arjuna became the protectors of his wheels; in his rear were the Draupadēyas and Abhimanyu, protected by Sātyaki and Cekitāna; behind them was Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, protected by the Pāñcālas; next to him was Yudhishtira with the twins; next behind him Virāṭa; next to him Drupada; the five Kekaya brothers and Dhr̥ṣṭaketu protected the rear. At their head the Kurus had Bhishma (δ), protected by Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons; next behind them Droṇa and Açvatthāman; next behind was Bhagadatta with his elephant division; behind him Kṛpa and Kṛtavarman; behind them the Kāmboja king Sudakṣiṇa, etc. (α). The Pārthas with Arjuna at their head, placing Çikhaṇḍin in the van, proceeded against Bhishma. Bhīma, etc. (β), slew many. Bhishma & Pāṇḍavas, etc. (γ); Bhishma & Çikhaṇḍin (who mentioned Bhishma & Rāma Jāmadagnya); Arjuna urged Çikhaṇḍin to slay Bhishma, while Arjuna would check Droṇa, etc. (ε) (VI, 108). Bhishma slew the Pāñcālas and the Pāṇḍava army. Arjuna slew the Kuru army. Duryodhana complained of Arjuna before Bhishma, and of Sātyaki, etc. (ε). Bhishma said he would "to-day" either be slain or slay the Pāṇḍavas, and he slew hundreds of thousands (VI, 109). Urged by Arjuna, Çikhaṇḍin, and so also Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ζ), attacked Bhishma; Citrāsena & Cekitāna; Kṛtavarman & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Somadatta's son & Bhīmasena; Vikarna & Nakula; Kṛpa & Sahadeva; Durmukha & Ghaṭotkaca; Duryodhana & Sātyaki; the Kāmboja king Sudakṣiṇa & Abhimanyu; Açvatthāman & Virāṭa & Drupada; Droṇa & Yudhishtira; Duḥçāsana & Arjuna & Çikhaṇḍin; etc.; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (exciting the troops for aiding Arjuna) & Bhishma; Arjuna could not advance further than to the chariot of Duḥçāsana, who also shot at Kṛṣṇa; Duḥçāsana for a moment sought refuge by Bhishma; then he again attacked Arjuna (VI, 110); Alambusha & Sātyaki; Bhagadatta & Sātyaki; Duryodhana & Sātyaki; the Kāmboja king & Abhimanyu; Çikhaṇḍin & Bhishma; Virāṭa & Drupada & Bhishma; Açvatthāman & Virāṭa & Drupada; Kṛpa & Sahadeva; Vikarna & Nakula; Durmukha & Ghaṭotkaca; Kṛtavarman & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Bhāricravas & Bhīmasena; Droṇa & Yudhishtira; the Prabhadras began to tremble; Citrāsena & Cekitāna; Arjuna compelled Duḥçāsana to retire, and then crushed the Kuru troops; Duḥçāsana again resisted him (VI, 111). Droṇa became cheerless upon beholding unfavourable omens (η); mentioning Çikhaṇḍin and Yudhishtira, etc. (θ), he urged Açvatthāman to attack Çikhaṇḍin and Bhīmasena (VI, 112). Bhagadatta, etc. (ι) (ten warriors urged by Droṇa) & Bhīmasena, who was also attacked by Duryodhana; Jayadratha mounted the chariot of Citrāsena; Viçoka was wounded by Çalya; Arjuna came, placing Çikhaṇḍin before himself, and approached Bhīma. Then Duryodhana urged the Trigarta king (who ruled Prasthala) Suçarma to slay Arjuna and Bhīmasena; Suçarma & Arjuna + Bhīmasena (VI, 113); Arjuna & Çalya, etc. (κ); Jayadratha also attacked Bhīma; so did also Çalya, who also shot at Kṛṣṇa; Droṇa + the Māgadha king Jayatsena (commanded by Duryodhana) & Arjuna + Bhīmasena; Jayatsena was carried away by his steeds. Then Bhishma, etc. (λ), & Bhīmasena + Arjuna; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Bhishma; Çikhaṇḍin & Bhishma; Yudhishtira, etc. (μ), & Bhishma. A terrible battle ensued, mainly turning upon whether Bhishma should be victorious or vanquished (VI, 114). At Bhishma's own request: Yudhishtira + Arjuna, etc. (ν), & Bhishma, who gave up all desire of protecting his own life. Urged by Duryodhana, Droṇa, etc. (ξ) (placing Bhishma in their van), & the Pārthas (headed by Çikhaṇḍin), especially Arjuna, etc. (ο); the grandson of Çini (Sātyaki) & Açvatthāman; Dhr̥ṣṭaketu & Paurava; Yudhāmanyu (B. Abhimanyu) & Duryodhana; Virāṭa & Jayadratha (Ṛddhikshattasya dūyādun; I do not understand the doubt of PCR.); Yudhishtira & Çalya; Bhīmasena & the elephant division; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Droṇa; Bṛhadbala (c) & Abhimanyu (d); the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc., & Çikhaṇḍin + Arjuna (VI, 115); Abhimanyu & Duryodhana; Açvatthāman & Sātyaki; Paurava & Dhr̥ṣṭaketu; Jayatsena (Dhṛtarāṣṭra) carried Paurava away on his chariot, and Sahadeva carried away Dhr̥ṣṭaketu; Citrāsena & Suçarma; Abhimanyu & Bṛhadbala (the Koçala king); Bhīmasena slaughtered the elephants; Yudhishtira & Çalya; Jayadratha & Virāṭa; Droṇa & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Arjuna & Bhishma; Bhagadatta & Arjuna, who urged Çikhaṇḍin to slay Bhishma; Bhagadatta (leaving Arjuna) & Drupada; Arjuna (placing Çikhaṇḍin ahead) & Bhishma; the Kurus attacked Arjuna; Çikhaṇḍin attacked Bhishma; 14,000 Cedis, etc. (π), were slain by Bhishma, and so the Somakas; no chariot-warrior ventured to approach Bhishma except Arjuna (with Kṛṣṇa) and Çikhaṇḍin (VI, 116). Bhishma did not defend himself against Çikhaṇḍin, whom Arjuna urged to quickly slay Bhishma, who with his arrows only checked Arjuna and slew the Pāṇḍava warriors. Duḥçāsana & Arjuna + all the Pārthas; Duḥçāsana was vanquished by Arjuna; the Videhas, etc. (ρ) (urged by Duryodhana) & Arjuna, who consumed them all by means of celestial weapons; Arjuna & Duḥçāsana, etc. (σ), who fled (in the forenoon); Bhishma (with a celestial weapon) & Arjuna; Çikhaṇḍin & Bhishma, who withdrew the celestial weapon (VI, 117). Çalya, etc. (τ), slaughtered the Pāṇḍava warriors; Arjuna felled a great many Kurus. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons & the Pāṇḍavas; the Somakas and Spṛijayas (urged by Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna) & Bhishma (who relied on the instruction he had got from Rāma); Bhishma slew 10,000 elephants, etc., and seven Matsyas and Pāñcālas, and Çātānika (the brother of Virāṭa), etc. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to slay Bhishma. The Pāñcāla king and Dhr̥ṣṭaketu, etc. (υ), were afflicted by Bhishma and rescued by Arjuna; Çikhaṇḍin, protected by Arjuna, rushed against Bhishma; Arjuna slew all Bhishma's followers, and then rushed at himself; Sātyaki, etc. (φ), attacked Bhishma, who slew seven warriors of Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna's division (VI, 118). Continuation: The extraordinary heroism of Bhishma: he (disregarding the Pāñcāla king and Dhr̥ṣṭaketu) & Sātyaki, etc. (χ); Arjuna (with Çikhaṇḍin ahead) & Bhishma; Droṇa, etc. (ψ) (employing celestial weapons), & Arjuna; Sātyaki, etc. (ω), & the Kauravas, in order to rescue Arjuna; Arjuna (with Çikhaṇḍin) & Bhishma, who (remembering the boon granted by his father) now wished his death, which was approved of by R. and V. (heard only by Bhishma and Saṅjaya), etc.; Bhishma said to Duḥçāsana that Arjuna was invincible, and that he himself could not be vanquished by D., Dā., and Rā. Yudhishtira urged his troops against Bhishma; Dhrtarashtra's sons surrounded Bhishma, but fled for Arjuna; the Sauvitas, etc. (αα), abandoned Bhishma. A little before sunset Bhishma fell down from his chariot with his head to the east; there were heard celestial voices, etc.; as the sun was in the southern solstice, Bhishma postponed his death; Gangā sent to him the great R. in form of swans inhabiting the Manasa lake. The Kurus, headed by Kṛpa and Duryodhana, sighed and wept; the Pāṇḍavas and Srñjayas, etc. (ββ), uttered loud shouts. R. and P. applauded Bhishma, who had recourse to that Yoga which is taught in the great Upanishads (VI, 119). Dhrtarashtra, mentioning Bhishma's brahmacarya for the sake of his father, and that he had not been slain by Rāma Jāmadagnya, grieved that he had been slain by Çikhaṇḍin. Sanjaya related that Bhishma lay on his bed of arrows, without, however, touching the earth. Both the Kurus (Karna, Duryodhana, etc.) and the Pāṇḍavas were despondent; the welkin was enveloped with a gloom, etc.; R., Si., and Cā. mentioned his brahmacarya for his father's sake. The Pāṇḍavas blew their conches, and Bhīmasena sported in great glee. Duḥśāna informed Droṇa, who fell down from his chariot, and then ordered the Kurus to desist from battle; and so did the Pāṇḍavas. Then the kings of both armies all repaired to Bhishma. Bhishma's head hanging down, he asked a pillow; he refused the soft pillows offered him, and asked Arjuna to give him a suitable pillow; Arjuna supported his head with three arrows shot from the Gāṇḍīva and inspired with mantras; Bhishma was highly gratified. He caused Duryodhana to dismiss the physicians; he asked that a ditch should be dug around him, until the sun should proceed towards the direction occupied by Vaiçravaṇa (i.e. the north), and told them to cease fighting. Stationing guards all around for his protection, the heroes repaired for rest in the evening. Kṛṣṇa congratulated Yudhishtira, "that canst slay with thy eyes alone"; Yudhishtira ascribed the victory to Kṛṣṇa (VI, 120).—§ 588: THE ELEVENTH DAY: After the night had passed away, maidens came to Bhishma and showered flowers upon him. The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas assembled together like brothers around his body. Bhishma asked for water; he refused the excellent viands and water offered him, and asked Arjuna to give him water; Arjuna mounted his chariot, and from the Gāṇḍīva shot an arrow inspired with mantras and identified with the Pārjanya weapon, piercing therewith the earth, and there arose a jet of pure and cold water; Bhishma praised Arjuna: "even Nārada spoke of thee as an ancient Ṛṣi"; he mentioned his alliance with Kṛṣṇa, and regretted that Duryodhana had not listened to the words of Bhishma, etc. (α). He said to Duryodhana that the weapons appertaining to Agni, etc. (β), were known only to Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, and told him to make peace, as long as Yudhishtira, etc. (γ), did not consume his troops; "let Yudhishtira go to Indraprastha." But Duryodhana would not accept his counsels (VI, 121). All the kings retired. Karna visited Bhishma in private. Bhishma told Karna that he was not the son of Rādha, but of Kuntī; that he knew from Nārada and Vyāsa; "sinfully didst thou come into the world; therefore it is that thy heart has been such, and also because thou didst associate with the low"; he mentioned that, proceeding to the city of Kāçi, Karna alone, with his bow, had crushed the kings in battle in order to procure a bride for the Kuru king; Jarāsandha could not become a match to Karna in fight. He adjured Karna to unite with his uterine brothers. Karna mentioned that Kuntī had abandoned him, and his obligations to Duryodhana, etc. (δ); he would fight Arjuna and the Pāṇḍavas though they were protected by Kṛṣṇa. Bhishma gave permission to Karna to fight, making heaven his goal, and then dismissed him (VI, 122).

[Bhṛgu-Bharadvāja-saṃvāda(h)] ("the conversation between Bhṛgu and Bharadvāja"). § 600b (Mokshadh.): The Primeval Being called Mānasa (description) > Mahat > Consciousness > Space > Water > Fire and Wind > Earth. The self-born Mānasa created a lotus pregnant with Energy > Brahmán > all things, Brahmán = Ananta: Agni and Soma (= the Sun and the Moon) are his eyes, etc. Bharadvāja asked Bhṛgu about the extent of the firmament. Bhṛgu explained that the firmament or Space is infinite, and is peopled with systems upon systems of self-luminous bodies (devāḥ), etc. Bharadvāja asked why Brahmán is called the first-born and not the Lotus whence he sprang. Bhṛgu's answer: The earth is that lotus, created to give rise to that form of Mānasa which became Brahmán; Sumeru, reaching up to heaven, became its pericarp (XII, 182). Bharadvāja asked how Brahmán, residing within Meru, created all things. Bhṛgu said that Mānasa [in his form of Brahmán, PCR.] created by fiat of Will, first water, which is the life of all creatures; earth, etc., are transformations of water, and have been produced by the solidification of that element. Bharadvāja enquired after the manner and order of the creation of the several elements; Bhṛgu explained that in very ancient times (the Brahmakalpa) Br.-r., assembled together, felt this very doubt, engaged in contemplation for 1,000 celestial years, and then heard a celestial voice saying: "Formerly there was only infinite Space . . ." (XII, 183). Asked by Bharadvāja, Bhṛgu explained why only the five primal elements are called Bhūtas. Bharadvāja enquired why all the elements are not seen in the immobile objects. Bhṛgu explained how all objects consist of all the five primal elements, but in each the proportions are different; as example he adduced the trees, which he showed to be not inanimate, etc.; through the breath called Prāṇa living creatures are enabled to move; through Vyāna they put forth strength for action; Apāna moves downward; Samāna resides within the heart; through Udāna one eructates and is enabled to utter the seven original notes called Shadja, etc. (a) (XII, 184). Asked by Bharadvāja, Bhṛgu explained how fire resides within a living body, and how wind moves the body; Prāṇa (c), Samāna (d), Apāna (e), Udāna (f), Vyāna (g) (XII, 185). Bharadvāja's observations on life being worth little if that which is called life be due to the action of fire and wind only (XII, 186). Bhṛgu's observations on the indestructibility of living creatures; Bharadvāja's objection; Bhṛgu's answer ("it is fire that sustains the breaths Prāṇa, etc.; that heat is called life . . ."). Bharadvāja enquired on the true nature of life; Bhṛgu explained that it is antarātman that inspires the body: water — the soul (ātmā) = Brahmán (in all creatures) = kehatrajña and paramātman respectively; etc. There is no destruction of the living agent; it is the body that is dissolved in death (XII, 187). Bhṛgu said: Brahmán first created only some brahmanas who were Prajāpatīs; then Truth, etc. (β); then D., Dā., G., Dai., As., M.-U., Y., Rā., N., Pç., and men with their four divisions: brahmanas (white), kehattriyas (red), vaiçyas (yellow), and çūdras (black); etc. Bharadvāja was unwilling to admit any original distinction between the four castes; Bhṛgu admitted that there is no original distinction between them; all the world at first consisted of only brahmanas; how the different castes gradually rose; those are not brahmanas that are incapable of understanding that every created thing is the Supreme Brahmán; they take birth as Pç., Rā., Preṭas, and Mlecchas (XII, 188). What acts constitute a brahman, a kehattriya; a vaiçya, a çūdra; a çūdra may become a brahman by adopting the characteristics of a brahman, and vice versa; the duties that one should observe to become truly righteous; the mind should be united with Prāṇa, and Prāṇa be held within Brahmán (XII, 189). Bhṛgu discoursed on the characteristics of Truth and Untruth; happiness should always be sought; upon what happiness depends; Bharadvāja doubted that happiness is the highest aim ("Brahmān lives alone, observant of the vow of brahmacharya; Çiva brought Kāma to extinction"); Bhṛgu's discourse in explanation of Bharadvāja's doubt ("the earth is the progenitrix of all creatures; females partake of her nature; the male animal is like Prajāpati himself") (XII, 190). Asked by Bharadvāja, Bhṛgu explained the consequences of gifts, of righteousness, of conduct, of penances, of the study of the Vedas, and of Sacrifices. Asked by Bharadvāja, he then discoursed about the several kinds of duty; then about the four modes of life (laid down in days of old by Brahmān for the benefit of the world) and the duties of the several modes (XII, 191); on the duties of the Forest mode of life; on those of the Parivrājakas. Bharadvāja enquired about the existence of any region beyond that which we inhabit; Bhṛgu indicated the existence in the North (on the other side of Himavat) of a region that is the abode of the righteous: "Here Brahmān in days of yore, and all the gods with it, having performed proper penances, became purified and attained to Brahmān."—Bharadvāja worshipped Bhṛgu with veneration (XII, 192).

Bhūmiparvan(^{va}) ("the section relating to the earth"; the 68th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.).—§ 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, (337).—[§ 575]: Dhṛtarāṣṭra wishes to hear about the extent of the ocean, of Çakadvīpa, etc. (a). Sañjaya describes the seven [great] islands, the moon and the sun, and Rāhu. Jambu-parvata (i.e. Jambu-dvīpa, v. Nil.) extends for 18,600 yojanas. The extent of the salt ocean is twice this; it has many kingdoms, mountains, etc., peopled by Si. and Cā., and is circular in form. Then Çakadvīpa (b) (VI, 11). In the North is the ocean of clarified butter; then that of curds; then that of wine; then another of water. The extent of the islands is doubled as they proceed further and further towards the North. In the island in the middle is the great mountain Gaura of red arsenic; in the western the mountain Kṛṣṇa, the friend (i.e. favourite abode, PCR.) of Nārāyaṇa, where Keçava guards celestial gems and bestows happiness on creatures. The clump of Kuça-grass in Kuça-dvīpa and the Çalmali tree in Çalmalika are adored. In the Krauñca island also the mountain Mahā-Krauñca (a mine of all kinds of gems) is always adored by all four castes of men. There is the huge mountain Gomanta (consisting of all kinds of metals), whereon, with the emancipated (mokṣibhiḥ), the puissant Nārāyaṇa Hari always resides. In Kuçadvīpa are six principal mountains (c); the intervening spaces increase in the ratio of one to two as they proceed further and further towards the North; and seven Varahas (ç), where D. and G., etc., sport, and the inhabitants never die, and there are no robbers or Mlecchas; all the residents are almost white and very delicate. In the Krauñca island are six mountains (η); the intervening spaces increase in the ratio of one to two; there are seven countries (deçāḥ) (θ), inhabited by D. and G.; the people are almost white. In the island of Pushkara is the mountain Pushkara, with jewels and gems; there Prajāpati always dwells, adored by D. and M.-r.; diverse gems from Jambu-dvīpa are used there. In all these islands truth, etc., increase in the ratio of one to two, as the islands become more and more remote. The land in all those islands comprises but one country, for that is said to be one country in which one religion is met with. Prajāpati always dwells there, protecting those islands. Cooked food comes there of itself. After these regions is seen Samā (e). Then he speaks of Scarbhānu (d; v. Rāhu), Candramas (e), Sūrya (f). "I have now told thee the construction of the universe according to the Çāstras. Therefore pacify thy son Duryodhana." Blessing upon the reader (VI, 12).

said: The seven R. Kaṣyapa, etc. (α), and Arundhati together had one single maidservant, Gaṇḍā, who was married to the śūdra Paṇṣakha. While they, in days of old, practised penances, preparing themselves for (upaśikṣhanto) Brahmaloka by yoga meditation (samādhiṇā), there occurred a severe drought; Çibi's son Çaibya had in summer times given away a son of his as the sacrificial present to the *ṛtvij*s; that prince now died of starvation; impelled by hunger, the Rakṣis cooked his body in a vessel. King Çaibya Vṛṣhādarbhi came and offered to give them kine, etc., but they refused it: that acceptance of gifts from a king was poison; they left the spot abandoning that flesh. The king sent his ministers with figs, some of which were filled with gold; but Atri, finding them heavy, refused to take them; and so did all of them (β), and left the spot. Filled with wrath, Vṛṣhādarbhi, after having observed penances, poured libations into the fire accompanied by mantras; from the fire a hag (kṛtyā) sprang forth, whom he called Yatudhāni; he ordered her to slay the Rakṣis, etc., having ascertained their names. While R. roved within the forest, subsisting upon fruits and roots, they saw a well-nourished mendicant [called further below Çunaḥsakha] with a dog in good condition; Arundhati pointed him out to them, and each of them explained the superior condition of this mendicant with reference to one of the points in which he was better situated than they (γ). The wandering mendicant approached them and touched their hand according to custom. One day they beheld a beautiful lake overgrown with lotuses, and desired to gather some lotus-stalks; urged by Vṛṣhādarbhi, Yatudhāni, who guarded the lake, would know their names before they took the stalks; Atri knew that she stood there in order to slay them; but they all told their names with their etymological explanations (δ); at each explanation Yatudhāni declared that she did not understand it, [in some cases] "in consequence of the inflections which the roots had undergone"; Çunaḥsakha calls himself Çunaḥsakha-sakhi, and as Yatudhāni wishes to hear the name once more in order to understand it, he struck her head with his triple stick, at which she was consumed to ashes. Having gathered lotus-stalks, they once more plunged into the lake in order to offer oblations of water to the Pitṛs. As they came up, the stalks were nowhere to be seen. They took, each of them, oaths to their innocence (ε); but the oath of Çunaḥsakha was "no oath at all," and he confessed that he had stolen the stalks from desire of testing them; he turned out to be Indra, who had come to test them, and told them the whole matter about Yatudhāni. They then ascended to heaven in the company of Indra himself * (XIII, 93).

Brahmadatta-Pūjani-Saṃvāda(h) ("conversation between Br. and P."). § 647b: XII, 139: As Bhīṣma had said that from trust great danger arose to kings, Yudhiṣṭhira asked: "But how would the king maintain himself if he were not to trust anybody?" Bhishma related: A bird named Pāṇi lived with king Brahmadatta in his palace at Kāmpilya; like [the bird] Jivajivaka, it could mimic the cries of all animals (rutajñā sarvabhūtanām), etc. At one and the same time P. got an offspring and the king a son. P. used every day to go to the shores of the ocean and bring a couple of fruits, one for her own child and one for the prince. One day the prince, when playing with the offspring of P., killed it, and then came back to his nurse. When P. had returned to the palace, she wept bitterly, and said that nobody should live with a kshatriya or make friends with him; for so long as it suits their purpose, they behave with courtesy; but then they throw off the instrument; they do evil to all, and should never be trusted; even after doing an injury they try to soothe. P. then pierced the eyes of the prince, saying that those who avenge an injury never lose their merit by such conduct. Thinking that the avenger only squares his account, Br. sought to prevail upon P. to remain; "even after a deadly injury, affection and mutual trust arise between two persons residing together (for instance, the śvapaca [cāṇḍala, PCR.] and the dog); animosity disappears quickly, like water poured upon the leaf of a lotus; it is Time that does every act; who therefore injures whom? Like fire consuming the fuel, Time consumes all creatures; what thou hast done, has been forgiven by me, do thou also forgive me." P. maintained that the injurer ought to leave his old place and never to place his trust upon the injured; just as the fragments of an earthen vessel cannot be reunited; animosity destroys the very sons and grandsons, and thereby the parties lose the next world as well; animosity can never die; it lies hidden like fire in wood, or like the water-fire (toyāgniḥ, i.e. the Aurva-fire) in the ocean; amongst men that have injured one another, therefore, mistrust alone can produce happiness; nor should too much trust be placed upon a person deserving of trust; one should try to inspire others with confidence in one's self, but never repose confidence in others (not even in a wife, son, brother, or friend); the mind of a person who has once injured another becomes naturally filled with mistrust if he sees the injured person worshipping him with gifts and honours. Hostility springs from five causes: woman, land, [harsh] words, natural incompatibility (sāpatna, i.e. jāti-vairam, [as] that between the cat and the mouse, Nil.), and injury; if Time be the cause of all acts, why do friends and kinsmen seek to avenge each other? further, why did the gods and the Asuras, in days of yore, smite each other in battle? and what use would there be of medicines? and how could religious merit be acquired by persons performing religious acts (kasmād dharmo 'sti kartṛeṣu)? Men wish for birds either [to kill them] for food or [to keep them in cages] for sport. Misery arises from various sources (decrepitude, loss of wealth, association with something disagreeable, separation from agreeable objects, death [badha], immurement [bandha], women, natural causes [sahajam], [especially the death of] a son; foolish persons say that there is no misery in others' misery; but one that knows the flavour of all [sorts of] misery (rasajñāḥ sarvaduḥkhasya), feels the misery of others as his own; [we have this] decision in [our] own practical scriptures, and [according to them] trust is productive of misery (niṣṭayāḥ svārthaḥ śāstrāṇāṃ, niṣṭeḥ śāstrāṇāṃ); ought we not to read 'yaḥ śārtha'?), and Uṇasas did formerly quote two verses (gāthā) [to this effect] to Prāhlāda (ś); those who trust [the word], true or false, of a foe, are killed by trusting (śraddadhānā) like [a seeker of] honey by dry grass; having conceived (upagrhya) hostilities [people] soothe [their foe], then they dash upon him like a full jar upon stone; if a king does injury to anyone, he should never trust him again. As Br. objected that by mere mistrust one does not obtain his desires, but is like a dead person, P. maintained that it is necessary not to act without an eye to the consequences (for instance, of sore feet, sore eyes, a wicked path, want of rain, injurious food); destiny and exertion are depending upon each other (daivam puruṣakāraḥ ca sthitāv anyonyasamprayāt); but those that are high-minded achieve good feats, while eunuchs only pay court to Destiny; knowledge, courage, cleverness, strength, and patience are one's natural (sahajāni) friends; house, precious metals (kupyam), land (kṣhetram), wife, and friends are secondary (upahitāni) and may be obtained everywhere; home-keeping persons (grhasneḥābaddhānām) of little understanding are eaten up by a bad wife like the crab by her progeny (māghamāṇaḥ sevāra—C. १०—iva, 89 = 5222, v. Nil.); one should put a distance between oneself and a bad wife, a bad son, a bad king, a bad friend, a bad alliance (ku-sambandham), and a bad country; she only is a wife who speaks what is agreeable; he is a son who makes his sire happy; he is a friend in whom one can trust; that is one's country where one earns one's living; he is a king of strict rule who does not oppress, etc. (95-96 = 5229-5230); the king is the root of the triple aggregate (trivargaṣya, i.e. Virtue, Wealth, and Pleasure); while taking from his subjects a sixth share of their wealth, he should protect them all; otherwise he is a thief, and takes upon himself the sins of all his subjects, and ultimately sinks into Hell (nirayaṇaḥ prayāti); the king, on the other hand, who gives protection is said by the Prajāpati Manu to have seven attributes (guṇān): he is a father (by compassion; the man who does not behave rightly towards him takes birth [in the next life] as an animal—tiryag gacchati), a mother (by doing good to his subjects—sambhārayati—and by cherishing the poor—dīnam apy upapadyate), a preceptor (guru) (by giving instruction in morality and virtue—dharmaśikṣa), a protector, fire (by scorching the wicked—anishṭān), Vaiśravaṇa (i.e. Kubera) (by making gifts of wealth to those that are dear to him—iṣṭeṣu), and Yama (by restraining the sinful—yamayān asataḥ) (c); that king, whose subjects grow like a large lotus in a lake, obtains every reward [here] and meets with honour in Heaven (Svargaloka mahiyate).—Then P. took leave of Br. and proceeded to the region she chose.

[Brāhmaṇagītā] ("the instruction given by the brahman").

§ 782b (Anugītāparvan): Kṛṣṇa said: A certain brahman's wife asked her husband (who was a complete master of every kind of knowledge and wisdom) to what region she should go, being dependent on him as her husband, who was harsh in his conduct towards her (kināçam, i.e. karkāçam niranukroçam, Nil.). The brahman discourses on acts; on the seat of the soul, where Brāhman, Soma, and Agni, etc., dwell, and for whose sake Brahman, etc., in Yoga, worship the indestructible, etc.; the life-breaths prāṇa, etc. (a); in the midst of them is Agni Vaiçvānara, whose seven flames are the nose, the tongue, the eye, the skin, the ear, the mind, and the understanding (boddhavyam), etc. (XIV, 20). In this connection an ancient story is cited, viz. that of the institution of the ten hotṛs, i.e. the ear, the skin, the two eyes, the tongue, the nose, the two feet, the two hands, the genital organ, the lower duct, and speech; sound, etc., are the ten libations; the points of the compass, wind, sun, moon, earth, fire, Vishṇu, Indra, Prajāpati, and Mitra are the ten fires, etc. (XIV, 21); in this connection an ancient story is cited, viz. that of the institution of the seven *hotra*s, the nose, the eye, the tongue, the skin, the ear, the mind, and the understanding (buddhiḥ), not knowing the qualities of one another; the nose, etc., and the understanding never succeed in apprehending doubt, it is the mind [alone] that apprehends it; the nose, etc., and the mind never succeed in apprehending determination; it is the understanding alone that apprehends it; in this connection this ancient narrative of a discourse between the senses and the mind is cited: as the nose does not smell, etc., without the mind, the mind thought itself to be the eternal and foremost one of all the elements; but the senses said that without them the mind would have no enjoyments at all, etc. (XIV, 22); likewise the ancient story of the institution of the five *hotra*s: Prāṇa, Apāna, Udāna, Samāna, and Vyāna; the wind nursed by Prāṇa > Apāna > Vyāna > Udāna > Samāna; these asked Brahmān in days of yore as to which of them was the foremost; Brahmān said that he upon whose extinction all the life-breaths become extinct is the foremost; it turned out (as Brahmān said) that they are all foremost and not foremost, as they possess the attributes of one another (XIV, 23); likewise the ancient story of the discourse between Nārada and R. Devamata. Devamata said: Which part of a creature that takes birth comes first into existence, is it Prāṇa or Apāna, etc.? Nārada seems to give the following explanation: kāma (desire) is (1-2) samāna and vyāna, which move transversely and alternately [from the man to the woman, and vice versa?] and have sprung from saliva; from kāma springs the vital seed [in the man] and the rajas or blood [in the woman]; from the union of these two springs (3) prāṇa, and from the seed being modified by prāṇa springs (4) apāna; these two move up and down and represent the two libations in the [mystical] fire; from the sexual intercourse of the loving pair springs harsha (pleasure), which is (5) udāna = the fire between prāṇa and apāna = the fire between day and night = the fire between sat (the existent) and asat (the non-existent) = [the union between Samāna and (Nil.)] Vyāna = Ānti (tranquillity) = eternal Brāhmaṇ ("as the brahmins know"); in fire the smoke is tamas (darkness), and the ashes rajas (passion). [Nil. takes all the expressions figuratively in a philosophical sense; according to him the seed (śukra) is = adṛṣṭa, i.e. the karman of past lives, the blood (conītam) = attachment to the objects of sense, prāṇa = lingātman, apāna = death, etc.] (XIV, 24); likewise the ancient story of the Caturhotra, i.e. the sacrifice with four *hotra*s; the instrument, the action, the agent, and emancipation; at the sacrifice of yoga the Prāṇa is the Stotra, etc. (β); people knowing Nārāyaṇa recite some Res; to Nārāyaṇa animals (i.e. the senses, Nil.) were offered in days of yore; and some Samāna; Nārāyaṇa is the soul of all (XIV, 25); † there is one ruler, residing in the heart, etc.; instructed by him the seven R.'s shine in the firmament; having lived with that instructor, Indra attained to the sovereignty of all the worlds. There is one enemy, residing in the heart; instructed by him all snakes are always hated († v. 746-750). In this connection the old story of the instruction of the snakes, the gods (and As.), and R. by Prajāpati is cited; asked by them what is highly beneficial, he said om, i.e. Brāhmaṇ in one syllable;

then they ran away in various directions from desire of self-instruction; first arose in the snakes the disposition of biting; in the As. the disposition for ostentatious pride; the gods betook themselves to gifts, and M.-r. to self-restraint (XIV, 26). The brahman compared the world to an impassable fastness (durgam), and Brāhmaṇ to a great forest; asked by his wife, he described this forest copiously (XIV, 27); "it is not I, but nature that smells scents, etc." In this connection an ancient discourse between an adhvaryu and a yati is recited: Beholding an animal sprinkled with water at a sacrificial ceremony, a yati blamed the adhvaryu for that destruction of life. The Adhvaryu appealed to the Vedas, saying, "This goat will not be destroyed, but will be benefited; that part of it which is of earth will go to earth," etc.; the yati said that if the sacrifice was to the benefit of the goat, then the goats ought to give their consent; "abstention from cruelty is alone worthy of approbation; one should be guided by perception"; the adhvaryu objected that by smelling what belongs to the earth, etc., one takes life, as all these entities have life; the yati distinguished between the indestructible and the destructible of the soul (ātmanah); of these only the indestructible is really existent; to him who is freed from all existent objects there is no fear; the adhvaryu admires and praises him, and says that he has no fault by performing those rites according to the mantras; the yati remained silent; the adhvaryu proceeded with the sacrifice (XIV, 28). Follows the ancient story about the 1,000-armed king Kārtavīryārjuna and the Ocean; v. Arjuna Kārtavīrya (c) and Paraśu-Rāma (d) (XIV, 29) with Alarka (e) (XIV, 30). The brahman said: There are three foes in the world (i.e. ninefold, on account of the three guṇas); exultation, satisfaction, and joy < goodness; desire, wrath, and hatred < passion; lassitude, sloth, and delusion < darkness. Persons conversant with the ancient kalpas recite some verses which were sung in days of old by king Ambarīsha, who had acquired a tranquil soul: "I have killed all foes, etc., but the greatest vice has not yet been destroyed by me . . ." (XIV, 31). Then the old narrative of the discourse between a brahman and king Janaka (f) is cited (XIV, 32-33). Asked by his wife as to how this knowledge may be acquired, the brahman said: Know that Brāhmaṇi (i.e. buddhi, Nil.) is the [lower] araṇi, the preceptor the upper araṇi; penances and converse with the scriptures turn the upper araṇi; knowledge is the fire produced. Asked by his wife about the symbol (lingam) of Brāhmaṇ called khetrajña, the brahman answered that he is without symbols and qualities. Kṛṣṇa said: Then the mind of that brahman's wife, upon the destruction of the khetrajña, became that which is beyond the khetrajñas, in consequence of the knowledge of khetra. Asked by Arjuna, where now that brahman and his wife were, Kṛṣṇa said: "My mind (manas) is the brahman, my understanding (buddhi) is the brāhmaṇi; he who has been called khetrajña is I myself" (XIV, 34).

Brāhmaṇa - mātmya - kathana. § 454 (Mārka.): Questioned by the Pāṇḍavas about the greatness of the brahmana, Mārkaṇḍeya told: A prince of the Haihayas killed a brahman, whom he took for a deer, as he was enveloped in the skin of a black antelope. The Haihayas, very afflicted, set out inquiring as to whose son the muni might be. Arriving at the hermitage of Turkshya Arishtanemi, they told him the matter, and learnt that it was his son, and that he had been revived, because these munis had no fear of death, as they spoke well of brahmana, etc. (III, 184).—§ 455: Mārkaṇḍeya continued: When the rājārshi Vainya was performing the horse-sacrifice, Atri desired to go and ask him for alms, but gave up his desire of wealth and proposed to his wife and sons that they should all retire to the woods. His wife prevailed upon him that (though he had heard from Gautama that there were *brahmana*s about Vainya who were jealous of him) he should first acquire riches and distribute them to his sons and servants, and so he went to Vainya and praised him as the foremost of sovereigns and the ruler of their destinies (vidhātṛ). The rishi Gautama blamed him for thus flattering the king, and said that it was Indra who was the foremost of sovereigns and ruler of their destinies (vidhātṛ). The munis (having let the pious Kāçyapa inquire about the matter) applied to Sanatkumāra, who said that the *brahmana*s and kshatriyas ought to act together, and that the king (enumeration of honourable appellations) might rightly be styled as Atri had done. Vainya then gave to Atri 1000 maid-servants and 100 millions of gold [coins] and ten bhāras of gold. Having given this to his sons Atri retired to the forest (III, 185).

[Brahma - Rudra - samvāda(h)], ("the discourse between Brahmān and Rudra"). § 717d (Nārāyaṇi): Vaiçampāyana said: In the midst of the ocean of milk there is a mountain of golden splendour, named Vaijayanta, where Brahmān (leaving his abode inhabited by D., As., R., G., and Aps.) often used to sit thinking of Adhyātma; once, in days of yore, his son Çira (endued with high yoga), who had sprung from his forehead, when proceeding along the sky saw him and dropped down before him, and was instructed by him about the many Purushas created by him (Brahmān), and the one Purusha, who transcends all Purushas and is invisible, etc. (XII, 351). Brahmān discoursed on the indications of Purusha (Mahāpurusha) (XII, 352).

Caitrarathaparvan ("the section relating to Citraratha," the eleventh of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Caitraratha[m] parvan.) § 216: Within a few days there came a brahman to the abode of their host, whom they asked to narrate the birth of Dhṛṣṭadyumna from the sacrificial fire, and that of Kṛṣṇa from the centre of the vedī, and that of Çikhaṇḍin, and how Dhṛṣṭadyumna learnt the use of all weapons from Droṇa, and how the friendship of Droṇa and Drupada was broken (I, 165).—§ 217: The brahman related (not mentioning Aśvatthāman) the birth of Droṇa (§ 200), his friendship with Drupada, and his visit to Rāma (§ 201; he obtained the Brahmāstra, v. 6340), the breaking of his friendship with Drupada (§ 202), how Bhīṣma prevailed upon him to teach the princes, etc. (both Arjuna and the others promised to give what he might ask for his fee, v. 6346), and the chastisement of Drupada (§ 209; Drupada resides in Chattravati, v. 6348) (I, 166).—§ 218: Draupadī-sambhava (q.v.).—§ 219: Hearing the words of the brahman, the sons of Kuntī seemed to be, as it were, pierced with darts. Kuntī proposed to Yudhiṣṭhira that they should go to the Pāñcalas, a country they had not seen before, and he consented for his part. When the other brothers had likewise consented, they set out for the town of Drupada (I, 168).—§ 220: When they were living disguised, Vyāsa came and told them that formerly the daughter of a rāṣi, notwithstanding her beauty, obtained no husband, and therefore by austerities propitiated Çankara five times, saying "Give me a husband." Accordingly the god said (notwithstanding her objection) that she should in a future life have five husbands. "That damsel is Kṛṣṇa, appointed to be the wife of ye all; go therefore to the capital of the Pāñcalas and dwell ye there." He then left them (I, 169).—§ 221: After Vyāsa had gone away, the Pāṇḍavas proceeded [towards the Pāñcalas] in a northerly direction, walking day and night, till they reached the tirtha Somāçrayāyana ("the shrine of Rudra with the crescent mark on his brow," PCR. with Nil.). Then they arrived at the Gaṅgā; Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna) walked before them, torch in hand. The Gandharva king with his wives was then sporting there in the Gaṅgā. Bending his bow to a circle, he said, "Excepting the first 80 lavas, the muhūrta (prasthānakālam, Nil.) that begins with the twilight preceding nightfall has been appointed for the Yakṣas, Gandharvas, and Rākṣasas, capable of going everywhere at will; the rest has been appointed for man to do his work. If therefore men, wandering during those moments from greed of gain, come near us, both we and the rākṣasas slay those fools. Therefore persons acquainted with the Vedas never applaud those men, who then approach any piece of water. Stay ye at a distance. Know that I am Angārāparṇa (= Citraratha, v. 6475; cf. LIA. i. 666/814), the friend of Kubera, and this my forest is also called Angārāparṇa, where neither kaṇḍapas (i.e. rākṣasas), nor çṛṅgins (a horned animal, see BR.; according to Nil. it is = kṣāṇḍikāḥ, a Çivaitic sect), nor gods, nor men can come." Arjuna replied: "Whether it be day, night, or twilight, who can bar others from the ocean, the Himālaya, and Gaṅgā?" (b). Arjuna burnt the Gandharva's chariot with the Agneya weapon, given by Bṛhaspati (the preceptor of Indra) to Bharadvāja, by him to Agniveçya, by him to Droṇa, by Droṇa to Arjuna, and dragged him, who had become unconscious, by the hair. His wife Kumdhinastī prevailed upon Yudhiṣṭhira, and he commanded Arjuna to spare him. He declared that, instead of his former name, Citraratha ("who has a variegated chariot"), he should now be called Dagdhāratha ("whose chariot has been burnt"), and imparted to Arjuna the Gandharvī vidyā called Cakṣuṣī (c). He also gave Arjuna and each of his brothers one hundred horses born in the country of the Gandharvas (Gandharvajāṇam), endued with the speed of wind and employed in carrying the gods and Gandharvas, a portion of Indra's vajra ("thunderbolt") (d). Arjuna in return gave him the Agneya weapon, and asked him why they, though skilled in the Vedas, had been consured by him. He replied that it was because they were without fires, without sacrifices, and without a brahman walking before them. "The Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Piçacas, Uragas, and Dānavas know the history of the Kuru race; I have heard from Nārada and other devareṣis the deeds of your ancestors. I have been vanquished by thee in battle on account of the brahmacharya being rigidly observed; a kṣāṭtriya, who is addicted to lust, if he fights in the night, can never escape with life; but even if addicted to lust, he who has a purohita may vanquish all wanderers of the night. Therefore, O Tapatya! kings should always select a fit purohita" (I, 170).—§ 222: Citraratha related Tapatyupākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 223-7: Vāsishṭha (q.v.).—§ 228: Aurovopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 229: Vāsishṭhupākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 230: Dhumya-purohitakarṇa (q.v.).

[Cyavana - Kuçika - samvāda(h)], "the discourse between Cyavana and Kuçika." § 745^c (Cyavanop.): Bhishma said: Cyavana Bhārgava saw the stain that would affect his own race and desired to consume the race of the Kuçikas; he came and said to king Kuçika that he desired to dwell with him for some time. Kuçika and his wife welcomed and honoured him; according to his desire, they promised to serve him, while he observed a vow. Once he slept for twenty-one days, while Kuçika and the queen kept themselves awake, foregoing all food; then Cyavana went out, followed by the king and the queen, and disappeared (XIII, 52); the king with the queen sorrowfully returned to the palace, where he found Cyavana stretched as before on his bed, and sat by his side, while he slept for twenty-one days; then Cyavana ordered them to rub him, and then entered the bathing house, and once more disappeared by means of his yoga-power. The next time, C. was seen on the throne; then he ordered food (description), but reduced it all to ashes, and disappeared. Kuçika with his queen stood there in the same posture the whole night without speaking a word, without giving way to wrath. So it went on every day. Cyavana failed to notice any fault in the conduct of the king. Then he ordered them to yoke themselves to a chariot and pull him along; it should be the king's battle-chariot with every weapon, etc., and the goad (description); they must drag him slowly in the sight of the people, who lamented; suddenly he struck them with the goad, so that they were covered with blood; no food had passed their lips for fifty nights; on his way he began to give away very largely of the king's property. Then Cyavana, delighted, came down from the chariot, unharnessed the royal couple, and granted them a boon; he softly touched them with his hands, the healing virtues of which were like ambrosia, and all their fatigue, etc., was dispelled, and they once more became endued with youth. He dismissed them till the next day, himself remaining on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Meanwhile Cyavana, by his yoga-power, upon kine, etc. Cyavana accepted the cow from the fishermen, and caused them along with the fishes to proceed to heaven. The two R. gladdened king Nahusha by granting him many boons; he accepted the boon that he should himself remain firm in virtue. The two R. returned each to his own asylum, and Nahusha to his city (XIII, 51). Asked by Yudhishthira about Rāma Jāmadagnya, etc. (a), Bhishma recited an old history of the discourse between Cyavana and Kuçika, i.e. Cyavana-Kuçika-samvāda (c) (III, 52-56).

Çākadvīpa, a dvīpa named after the Çāka-tree. § 575 (Bhūmip.): VI, 11α, 402.—§ 575b (do.): Ç. is of twice the extent of Jambudvīpa, and the ocean also is of twice the extent of that island. Ç. is surrounded on all sides by the ocean. The kingdoms there are full of righteousness, and the men never die; there is no famine; the people are all full of forbearance and great energy. There are seven mountains decked with jewels, etc., and many rivers. The mountains are: (1) Meru, the abode of D., R., and G.; (2) Malaya, to the east; there the clouds are generated, and thence they disperse on all sides; (3) Jaladhara, whence Indra daily takes water, and from that we get showers of rain; (4) Raivataka, over which the constellation Revati is placed by Brahmān himself; (5) on the north of this is Çyāma. Because the hue of these mountains is dark, the people residing there are all dark in complexion; (6) Durga-çaila; (7) Keçarin (B. Keçara). The measure of each of these mountains is double that of the one mentioned immediately before. There are seven Varshas (β), one for each mountain. In the midst is a large tree called Çāka, in height and breadth equal to the Jambu-tree in Jambudvīpa, and it is always adored by the people. There are many delightful provinces where Çiva is worshipped, and thither repair D., Si., and Cā. The people are virtuous, and all the four orders are devoted to their respective occupations. There is no instance of theft. They are free from decrepitude and death, and gifted with long life. The rivers (γ) are full of sacred water whence Indra draws water to shower it as rain. Gaṅgā herself is among them. They are all sin-cleansing. There are four sacred provinces (δ). There is no king and no punishment, and no person that deserves to be punished: VI, 11, 408, 411, 413, 441.—§ 623 (Rājadh.): XII, 14a, 406 (east of Meru, swayed by Yudhishthira), 407.

[Çakulopākhyāna(m)], "the episode about the Çakula fishes." § 645b (Āpaddh.): In a lake that was not very deep and which abounded in fishes, there lived three Çakula fishes (kuçalās in B. seems only to be a typographical error) that were friends; amongst those three, one had much forethought (dirghakūlajñāḥ); another was possessed of great presence of mind (utpannapratibhāḥ); the third was procrastinating (dirghasūtrāḥ). One day certain fishermen coming to that lake began to bale out its waters to a lower ground through diverse outlets. He of great forethought, having in vain warned the others, immediately set out through a current and reached another deep lake. The procrastinating one was caught with many others and tied to a string. He of presence of mind thrust himself into the company of those so tied, and remained quietly among them biting the string, and escaped when the fishes were removed to a piece of deep water to be washed. The procrastinating one met with his death (XII, 137).

Çakunisuta ("son of Çakuni") = Ulūka: VIII, 4307.

Çakuna, son of Viçvāmitra. § 721b (Viçvāmitrop.): XIII, 43, 249.

Çakuntalā, daughter of Viçvāmitra and Menakā, wife of Dushyanta, and mother of Bharata. § 11 (Parvasuṅgr.): I, 2, 371. — § 133 (Dushyanta): I, 69, 2814, 2815 (Dushyanta sees Ç. in the hermitage of Kaṇva); 71, (2903). — § 134 (Viçvāmitra): I, 71, (2912); 72, 2945 (daughter of Viçvāmitra and Menakā), 2951 (origin of her name: nirjane tu vane yasmāt çakuntaiḥ parivāritā | Ç^oeti nāmāsyāḥ kṛtāṃ cāpi tato mayā), 2952, (2953). — § 135 (Çakuntalop.): I, 73, (2959), (2968), 2977, 2981, (2985), 2987; 74, 2988, 2997, 2998, 3000, 3003, 3060, (3069), 3101, 3102, 3103 (Dushyanta wedded Ç. according to the Gāndhārva form of marriage, and returned to his capital; Ç. brought her son Bharata to Dushyanta, who first did not acknowledge him as his son, until a celestial voice testified the truth of Ç.'s words). — § 156 (Pūruvamp.): I, 95, ††3782 (Viçvāmitraduhitarāṃ), 3783-4 (= vv. 3102-3). — § 565 (Gālavacarita): V, 117, 3974 (remo . . . yathā . . . Çakuntalāyām Dushvantah).

Çakuntala, "son of Çakuntalā" (metron.) = Bharata: I, 3104, 3105, 3118, 3709; VII, 2387; XII, 938 (Bh^o); XIV, 50 (Bh^o).

Çakuntalopākhyāna(m), "episode relating to Çakuntalā." § 133 (Sambhav.): I, 68-70: Dushyanta (q.v.) saw Çakuntalā (§ 134), daughter of Viçvāmitra (q.v.) and Menakā. — § 135: Enumeration of the eight forms of marriage according to Manu. Dushyanta, during the absence of Kaṇva, wedded Çakuntalā according to the Gāndhārva form, promising her that her son should be the heir apparent, and departing told her that he should send troops to take her to his capital. Kaṇva, by his spiritual knowledge, knew what she had done, and approved of it, and bestowed on her the boon that the Paurava monarchs might ever be virtuous and never be deprived of their thrones (I, 73). Çakuntalā, after three years, brought forth a beautiful boy, for whom Kaṇva caused all the religious rites to be performed, and who, when he was only 6 years of age, used to seize and bind to the trees lions, etc., wherefore he was called Sarvadamana. Then Kaṇva caused his disciples to bring Çakuntalā and the boy to Hastinapura and introduce them to Dushyanta. Then they returned to the hermitage. Dushyanta feigned not to remember anything. Then Çakuntalā became angry ("But knowest thou not the Ancient Wise [munim purāṇam, i.e. Nārāyaṇa] who lies in the heart? He who sins is observed by the gods and by him also who occupies every heart. The sun, the moon, the air, fire, earth, sky, water, the heart, Yama, the day, the night, both twilights, and Dharma, all witness the acts of man. Yama Vaivasvata takes no account of the sins of that person with whom [Nārāyaṇa] the witness of all acts is gratified. But that person with whom he [Nārāyaṇa] is not gratified is tortured for his sins by Yama . . . The son that is born to persons cognizant of the Vedic mantras rescues the spirits of deceased ancestors. Because the son rescues the father from the hell which is called Pūt, therefore he has been called putra by Svayambhū himself . . . Even ṛshis cannot create creatures without women . . . 'He shall perform a hundred horse sacrifices,' were the words uttered in the skies when I was in the lying-in room . . . Uṛvaçī, Pārvacitti, Sahajanyā, Menakā, Viçvaci, and Ghṛtaci, these are the six foremost Apsarases; amongst them, again, Menakā, born of Brahmān, is the first . . . I can repair to the abodes of Indra, Kubera, Yama, and Varuṇa . . . The Pitṛs have said that the son continues the race, and he is therefore the best of all religious acquirements . . . Manu has said that there are five kinds of sons . . ."). Then she left his presence. But a voice from the sky commanded Dushyanta to cherish (bhara) his son, who should therefore be called Bharata. It was this voice of the Devadūta that Dushyanta had waited for, that the people should not regard his son as of impure birth. Bharata reduced to subjection all the kings of the earth and became a sarvabhauma-oakravartin, and performed many sacrifices with Kaṇva as the chief priest. From him has come the Bharata race, of whom the principal ones shall be mentioned (I, 74).

Çalyaparvan¹ ("the section relating to Çalya"), the 9th of the greater parvans of Mhbhr. § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 90 (°eugandhibhih).—§ 11 (Parvas.): I, 2, 550, 552.—§ 796c (Mahābhārata): XVIII, 6, 275 (enumeration of what gifts should be given away during the recitation of Ç.).

Çalyaparvan², the 80th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 346.—§ 609: Requested by Janamajaya (a), Vaiçampāyana related Duryodhana's grief at Karna's slaughter, his resolution to continue the battle, his making Çalya the commander of the army; that Çalya, having made a great carnage, was slain by Yudhishtira at midnight; that Duryodhana fled away from the field, penetrated into a lake, and in the afternoon was summoned and slain by Bhimasena, who had caused the lake to be encompassed by many warriors; that Açratthāman, etc. (β), slaughtered the Pāṇḍala troops in the night; that Saṅjaya, next morning, having set out from the camp, entered the city; the grief of the citizens upon hearing Duryodhana's fall; that Saṅjaya informed Dhrtarāshtra (γ) ("on the side of the Pāṇḍavas 7 are alive, amongst the Dhrtarāshtras 3") (δ); Dhrtarāshtra's, etc. (ε), grief; that Dhrtarāshtra ordered Vidura to let the ladies and Gāndhārī retire, and was comforted by Vidura (IX, 1); Dhrtarāshtra's lament and how he asked Saṅjaya about the battle (ζ) (IX, 2). Saṅjaya begins his narration.—§ 610: The fear of the Kuru army after the fall of Karna, and the state of the Kuru army (η); Duryodhana's resolution to resist the victors (θ); Bhima and Dhrishtadyumna caused a great carnage; Arjuna proceeded towards the car-division; Nakula, etc. (ι), & Çakuni; 25,000 foot-soldiers & Arjuna; they were slain by Dhrishtadyumna (β) and Bhima; the Kuru army broke and fled away; Cakitana, etc. (κ), having slain a large number, blew their conchs; Arjuna attacked the rest; they fled; Duryodhana & the Pāṇḍavas; Duryodhana rallied his troops (λ); Duryodhana (+ all his troops) & the Pāṇḍavas (headed by Yudhishtira) (IX, 3). Kṛpa urged Duryodhana to make peace (μ) (IX, 4); Duryodhana refused (ν). The troops were filled with enthusiasm; they took up their quarters about two yojanas distant, and bathed in the Sarasvati of red waters on the sacred and beautiful tableland at the foot of Himavat (IX, 5); there they passed the night: Çalya, etc. (ξ), and urged Yudhishtira to continue the battle. Duryodhana addressed Açvatthāman (description) (ο), according to whose proposal Çalya was made generalissimo (π) (IX, 6); Çalya promised to slay the foes (ρ). Çalya was anointed; the troops became cheerful (σ). Çalya resolved to slay or be slain (τ). No one any longer felt any grief on account of Karna; they slept that night happily and became very cheerful. Yudhishtira asked Kṛṣṇa his advice (υ); Kṛṣṇa praised Çalya (Ārtāyana), saying that he was equal to Bhishma, etc. (φ), and superior to Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (χ); he thought only Yudhishtira was a match for Çalya, and urged him to slay him. After Kṛṣṇa had gone, Yudhishtira dismissed all his brothers and the Somakas and slept happily that night, and so did the Pāṇḍalas and the Pāṇḍavas, delighted with Karna's fall (IX, 7).—§ 611: THE BATTLE OF THE FORENOON OF THE EIGHTEENTH DAY. After that night had passed away, the Kuru army, urged by Duryodhana, prepared for battle; the leaders, Kṛpa, etc. (a), resolved to fight unitedly ("or be stained with the five great sins and all the minor sins"). Then, with Çalya at their head, they quickly proceeded against the foes. Similarly, the Pāṇḍavas. Asked by Dhrtarāshtra about Çalya's slaughter by Yudhishtira and Duryodhana's by Bhimasena, Saṅjaya related: Çalya proceeded with horses of the Sindhu breed yoked unto his chariot, at the head of the array, accompanied by the Madrakas and the sons of Karna; enumeration of warriors on the left (β), on the right (γ), in the rear (δ), in the centre (ε); Çakuni and Uluka surrounded by a large force of cavalry, etc. The mighty bowmen amongst the Pāṇḍavas divided themselves into three bodies, and rushed against the Kurus; Dhrishtadyumna, etc. (ζ), against the army of Çalya; Yudhishtira with his troops against Çalya alone; Arjuna against Kṛtavarma and the Samçaptakas; Bhimasena, etc. (η), against Kṛpa; Nakula and Sahadeva against Çakuni and Uluka. Requested by Dhrtarāshtra, Saṅjaya enumerated the relative strength of the two armies (θ) (IX, 8). The commencement of the battle (description); a terrible slaughter on both sides. Arjuna and Bhimasena stupefied their foes; Dhrishtadyumna, etc. (ι), & Çalya; Nakula and Sahadeva proceeded with speed; the Kurus fled away (IX, 9). Çalya & Yudhishtira (+ the Pāṇḍava host); Nakula & Karna's son Citrāsena, whom he slew; Nakula & Citrāsena's brothers Satyasena and Sushena; Nakula slew Satyasena, mounted the chariot of Sutasoma, and slew Sushena. The Kurus were rallied by Çalya; a great slaughter took place on both sides. Satyaki, etc. (κ), roared like lions, etc. The Kurus surrounded Çalya; thither came Arjuna, having slaughtered the Samçaptakas, and the Pāṇḍavas headed by Dhrishtadyumna (IX, 10). Çalya fought with great heroism against the troops of Yudhishtira; portents appeared on earth and in the skies. Çalya & Yudhishtîra, etc. (λ); many were slain; the Pāṇḍava army repaired to Yudhishtîra; Kṛtavarma, etc. (μ), & Bhīmasena, etc.; Kṛtavarma & Bhīmasena; Kṛpa & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Çakuni & the Draupadeyas; Aśvatthāman & the twins; Duryodhana & Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna; the Bhoja chief slew the brown steeds of Bhīmasena; Çalya slew the steeds of Sahadeva, who then slew Çalya's son; Kṛpa & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Aśvatthāman & the Draupadeyas; once more the steeds of Bhīmasena were slain; he crushed the steeds and chariot of Kṛtavarma, who fled away; Çalya & Yudhishtîra, etc. (ν); Bhīma (with his mace, with which he had challenged Kuberā and slain Gh. on Gandhamādāna) & Çalya (IX, 11); "save Çalya or Rāma (the delighter of the Yadus), none else can venture to encounter Bhīma; save Bhīma, none can venture to encounter Çalya"; Kṛpa taking up Çalya on his own chariot, bore him away; Bhīma had also been made senseless. The Kurus (headed by Duryodhana) & the Pāṇḍavas; Duryodhana & Çekitāna; Kṛpa, etc. (ξ), & Yudhishtîra; Duryodhana & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Aśvatthāman (with 3,000 chariots, despatched by Duryodhana) & Arjuna; Çalya & Cundrasena & Drumasena & Yudhishtîra + 25 Cedis, etc. (ο); Yudhishtîra was worsted (IX, 12). Sātyaki and Bhīmasena, etc. (ο) (+ Yudhishtîra) & Çalya; Si., etc., were delighted; Duryodhana regarded the Pāṇḍavas, Pāṇḍalas, and Śr̥ṅjayas as already slain; the Pāṇḍavas & Çalya, who agitated the whole Pāṇḍava army; D. and G. wondered; the Pāṇḍavas with Bhīmasena at their head and led by Yudhishtîra did not fly (IX, 13). Arjuna & Aśvatthāman and the Trigartas; Arjuna destroyed 2,000 chariots; Aśvatthāman & the Pāṇḍala Suratha, whom he slew; Aśvatthāman and the Saṃçaptakas & Arjuna (IX, 14). Duryodhana & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Çikhaṇḍin + the Prabhadrakas & Kṛtavarma and Kṛpa; Çalya & the Pāṇḍavas (with Bhīma, etc. (π), and Sātyaki); Nakula + Yudhishtîra & Çalya; Yudhishtîra, etc. (ρ), & Çalya; Çalya & Bhīmasena + Sātyaki (whom he deprived of his chariot); Sātyaki (on another chariot) & Çalya (IX, 15). The Pāṇḍavas (in the very sight of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, and though checked by Bhīmasena) were afflicted by the Kurus (headed by Çalya). Arjuna & Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma; Sahadeva & Çakuni; Nakula cast glances on Çalya from the side; the Draupadeyas checked numerous kings; Çikhaṇḍin & Aśvatthāman; Bhīmasena & Duryodhana; Yudhishtîra & Çalya; Çalya alone fought with the whole Pāṇḍava army; Çalya & Bhīma; the Pāṇḍavas fled, disregarding the cries of Yudhishtîra, who, summoning all his brothers and Kṛṣṇa, declared that after Bhīshma, etc. (σ), had been slain, Çalya only remained as his share; the sons of Mādri should be the protectors of his wheels; Sātyaki would protect his right wheel and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna his left, Arjuna his rear, Bhīma fight in his front. The Pāṇḍava troops rejoiced, especially the Pāṇḍalas, etc. (τ); Yudhishtîra & Çalya; Bhīma & Duryodhana; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ν), & Çakuni, etc.; Duryodhana was borne away by his steeds; Aśvatthāman, etc. (φ), followed him in order to rescue him; the Kaurava troops became terrified; Arjuna began to slay them; Çalya was worsted by Yudhishtîra; the army of Duryodhana broke; Aśvatthāman, taking Çalya up on his own chariot, fled away; Çalya (on another chariot) & Yudhishtîra (IX, 16) + Sātyaki, etc. (χ); the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ψ), & Çalya; the Kurus surrounded Çalya at the command of Duryodhana; Kṛpa slew Yudhishtîra's charioteer, and Çalya his steeds; Bhīmasena slew Çalya's charioteer and steeds and out off his armour; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ω), & Çalya; Yudhishtîra slew Çalya with a celestial dart (created by Tvāṣṭi for the use of Iṣāna, and always worshipped by the Pāṇḍavas with perfumes and garlands and excellent seats and the best kinds of viands and drinks). Çalya's younger brother & Yudhishtîra, who slew him; the Kurus broke; Sātyaki & Kṛtavarma, whom Kṛpa carried away on his chariot; Duryodhana alone withstood the Pāṇḍava leaders (αα); Kṛtavarma (on another chariot) + Kṛpa & Yudhishtîra; Kṛtavarma was carried away by Aśvatthāman upon the latter's chariot; Kṛpa & Yudhishtîra. The Pāṇḍavas blew their conchs and applauded Yudhishtîra (IX, 17). The followers of Çalya (1,700 Madrakas) resolved to avenge him; Duryodhana commanded them not to proceed to battle; they, however, attacked Yudhishtîra; Arjuna, etc. (ββ), & the Madrakas, whom they began to slaughter; Duryodhana in vain tried to prevent them from fighting; then, urged by Çakuni, he proceeded to the rescue of the Madrakas. The Pāṇḍavas arranged themselves in the form called Madhyama and slew the Madrakas; meteors, etc., were seen; the Pāṇḍavas encountered a body of horse advancing towards them; the Kuru army fled away (IX, 18). Also the sons of Dhr̥tarāṣṭra almost all turned away from the fight at noon; their fear was like to that after the fall of Bhīshma, etc. (γγ); the Pāṇḍalas and the Pāṇḍavas pursued them, and congratulated one another (δδ). The Śr̥ṅjayas pursued the Kurus; Arjuna & the chariot-division; Nakula, etc. (εε), & Çakuni. Duryodhana rallied 21,000 foot-soldiers, resisted by Bhīmasena and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Bhīma slew them; Yudhishtîra's troops in vain tried to transgress Duryodhana. Duryodhana rallied a small force by a spirited address (ζζ); the Pāṇḍavas, especially Arjuna, rushed against them; Nakula, etc. (ηη), against Çakuni (IX, 19). The Mleccha king Çālva (on an elephant, sprung from a noble breed, and always worshipped by Duryodhana) attacked the Pāṇḍavas (+ Somakas and Śr̥ṅjayas), who fled; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (in order to vanquish the elephant) & Çālva; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna had his chariot, steeds, and charioteer destroyed by the elephant; Bhīma, etc. (θθ), & Çālva (+ the elephant); the Pāṇḍalas, etc. (ιι), lamented; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna slew the elephant with his mace, and Sātyaki slew Çālva (IX, 20). Kṛtavarma, rallying a portion of the Kuru army, resisted the Pāṇḍavas; Sātyaki & king Kṣhemakṛti, whom he slew; Kṛtavarma & Sātyaki; the Pāṇḍavas, the Pāṇḍalas, etc., became spectators; Kṛpa carried Kṛtavarma away upon his chariot; the whole army of Duryodhana fled except Duryodhana, who assailed all the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (κκ); then Kṛtavarma came (on another chariot) (IX, 21). Duryodhana alone resisted the Pāṇḍavas; the Kuru army once more rallied and fought; Duryodhana & Yudhishtîra, etc. (λλ); Aśvatthāman & Bhīmasena; Çakuni & Yudhishtîra, who was carried away by Sahadeva on his chariot; Yudhishtîra (on another chariot) & Çakuni; Si. and Cā. applauded; Ulaka & Nakula; Kṛtavarma & Sātyaki; Duryodhana & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Kṛpa & the Draupadeyas (IX, 22). The Kurus were broken by the Pāṇḍavas, but rallied by the sons of Dhr̥tarāṣṭra; Yudhishtîra & Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma (who was carried away by Aśvatthāman); Duryodhana despatched 700 chariots against Yudhishtîra; Çikhaṇḍin, etc., came to aid Yudhishtîra; an awful battle ensued; the 700 were slain; the Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍalas resisted; terrifying omens in nature were seen. Çakuni exhorted the others to fight in front; he would himself slay the Pāṇḍavas from behind; the Madrakas rejoiced, but were slain; Çakuni with 10,000 horsemen assailed the Pāṇḍava army in the rear; the force of the Pāṇḍavas broke down. Yudhishtira urged Sahadeva to slay Çakuni, aided by the Draupadeyas; Yudhishtira, with the Pāñcālas, would himself destroy the chariot-force. Sahadeva (with 700 elephants, 5,000 horses, and 3,000 foot-soldiers) + the Draupadeyas & Çakuni, who, with 6,000 horses, went away; similarly, the Pāṇḍava force, which was reduced to 6,000 horses: the Draupadeyas proceeded to Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, Sahadeva to Yudhishtira; Çakuni & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna's division; after a terrible battle the Pāṇḍavas encompassed Çakuni (IX, 23). Çakuni exhorted the remainder of his following, 700 horses, and urged Duryodhana to attack the Pāṇḍavas (μμ); the remnant of the Kuru army attacked the Pāṇḍavas; Arjuna (desiring to exterminate the Kurus) addressed Kṛṣṇa, recounting the loss sustained by the Kurus (νν), and attacked the remnant of the Kuru army, and caused a great slaughter (IX, 24). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ΞΞ), & the chariot-force; Duryodhana escaped on horseback to Çakuni; 3,000 elephants encompassed the Pāṇḍava brothers, and were slain by Arjuna and Bhīma, etc. (οο). Açvatthāman, etc. (ππ), enquired about Duryodhana, pierced through Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna's force, and proceeded to Çakuni. The Pāṇḍavas, headed by Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, assailed the Kurus. Saijaya (having joined the five leaders and posted his men, who had been afflicted by Arjuna, by Kṛpa) & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Satyaki & Saijaya, who was made captive; Bhīma and Arjuna destroyed the elephants; Açvatthāman, etc., seeking Duryodhana, proceeded to Çakuni (IX, 25). Eleven sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra: Durmarshana, etc. (ρρ), & Bhīmasena, who slew them. Bhīmasena then slew 500 chariot-warriors, 10,000 foot, 700 elephants, and 800 horses (IX, 26). Duryodhana and Sudarçana (the only sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra yet unslain) were in the midst of the cavalry. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to destroy the remnant of Duryodhana's troops (σσ); Arjuna assented (ττ); "only 500 horses form the remnant of the troops of Çakuni . . . there remain also Açvatthāman, etc. (υυ)." Bhīmasena, etc. (φφ), & Duryodhana + Çakuni; Dhṛtarāṣṭra's son Sudarçana & Bhīmasena; Suçarman and Çakuni & Arjuna; Duryodhana (on horseback) & Sahadeva. Arjuna & the Trigartas; Arjuna slew Satyakarma, Satyeshu, and the Prasthala ruler Suçarman, and the latter's thirty-five sons, etc., and then proceeded against the remnant of the Bharata host. Bhīma slew Sudarçana (Dhṛtarāṣṭra), and completed the destruction of the Kaurava army (IX, 27). Çakuni & Sahadeva; Ulūka & Bhīmasena; Sahadeva sat down on his chariot; Bhīma and Sahadeva & Çakuni's men, who fled away, but were rallied by Duryodhana; Sahadeva + Nakula and Bhīma & Çakuni + Ulūka; Sahadeva slew Ulūka; Çakuni (recollecting the words of Vidura) & Sahadeva; Çakuni's division and Çakuni himself fled away, pursued by Sahadeva, who slew him (IX, 28).

Çāntanunandana = Bhishma, q.v.

Çāntanūpākhyāna(m) ("episode relating to Çāntanu"). § 162 (Sambhav.): The rājareṣi Pratīpa spent many years in ascetic penances at the source of Gaṅgā. She sat upon his right thigh and wished him to be her husband. He replied that the left lap was for the wife, but the right for the daughters and daughters-in-law; therefore he accepted her for his son, to which Gaṅgā consented on the condition that his son should not be able to judge of the propriety of her acts. Then Pratīpa, along with his wife, engaged in ascetic austerities from desire of offspring, and when they had grown old, Mahābhīṣa (v. Mahābhīṣhop.) was born as a son to them and was called Çāntanu, because his father had controlled his passion (çāntasya santānaḥ, v. 3882, cf. 3799). When Çāntanu had grown to become a youth, Pratīpa told him about his appointment with the celestial damsel, installed him upon the throne, and retired into the woods. Çāntanu, who was addicted to hunting, one day came upon the banks of Gaṅgā, frequented by Siddhas and Caraṇas, and there he requested Gaṅgā, in the form of a lovely maiden, to become his wife (I, 97). (For continuation v. Bhishmotpatti.)

Çārṅgākopākhyana(m) ("episode relating to the çārṅgaka birds"). § 259 (Khaṇḡavad): Janamejaya said: "Why did the *çārṅgaka*s escape?" Vaiçampāyana said: When the maharshi Mandapala, who was an ardhavarata, had finished his tapas, he left his body and went to Pitṛloka, but did not obtain the expected result of his acts, and learned from the gods sitting around Dharmarāja that it was because he had no offspring. He then reflected how he could obtain numerous offspring in the shortest time possible; he learnt that the birds were peculiarly prolific, and, becoming a çārṅgika, he married the çārṅgikā Jaritā, and begat upon her four sons, who were all reciters of the Vedas. Then he left her and married Lapitā. When Agni came to the forest of Khaṇḡava to burn it down, Mandapala praised Agni (vv. 8353–8360) and prevailed upon him to spare his children (I, 229). Jaritā told her sons (Jaritāri, Sarivṛkva, Siama-mitra, and Drona), who would have her to rescue herself by abandoning them, to conceal themselves in the hole of a mouse; but they were afraid of the mouse (I, 230). Finally Jaritā was prevailed upon by her sons to abandon them, and Agni approached the spot where the sons were (I, 231). The four young çaris praised Agni, who promised them safety and granted them a boon. Drona asked him to consume the cats that troubled them every day (I, 232). Meanwhile Mandapala addressed Lapitā, being anxious about his children. Lapitā, from jealousy, told him to go to Jaritā, who, she said, was the real cause of his anxiety. When Agni had spared the children, Jaritā came and embraced them. When Mandapala came they did not speak to him, and Jaritā, from jealousy, told him to go to Lapitā. Mandapala declared that nothing was so destructive to the happiness of women as a concubine, except a lover; witness Arundhati (3). Then all his children came forward to worship him, and he also spoke kindly to them all (I, 233). Mandapala told that he had asked Agni to protect them, and therefore he had not come earlier. Then he took his wives and sons with him and went away to some other country (I, 234).

Çiçupālavadhaparvan ("of the killing of Çiçupāla," the 27th of the minor parvas of Mbhr., cf. Çiçupālavadha). § 290: As Yudhishtira was afraid that his sacrifice might be obstructed, Bhishma consoled him, saying that Kṛṣṇa was invincible (II, 40). Çiçupāla again censured Bhishma and Kṛṣṇa, and compared Bhishma to the old swan, who always preached of virtue, so that the other birds gave him food and kept their eggs with him; but the old swan used to eat up their eggs, till he was found out and slain (II, 41). Çiçupāla censured Kṛṣṇa's behaviour towards Jarāsandha; Bhishma rushed up in anger, but was restrained by Bhishma, while Çiçupāla was boasting (II, 42). Bhishma said: Çiçupāla was born with three eyes and four hands, and brayed like an ass; his parents resolved to abandon him, but were prevented by an incorporeal voice who foreboded that that man in whose lap the child would be sitting, when its superfluous arms would fall down and the third eye on its forehead disappear, should be its slayer. Though the child was placed upon the laps of 1,000 kings, this came not to pass until Rāma and Kṛṣṇa went to the capital of the Cedis to see their father's sister (the mother of Çiçupāla), when the boy was placed on the lap of Kṛṣṇa; then the arms fell down and the eye disappeared. Kṛṣṇa granted to Çiçupāla's mother the boon that he would pardon 100 offences of Çiçupāla's (II, 43). Bhishma declared that Kṛṣṇa himself had wanted to provoke the boast of Çiçupāla. Çiçupāla reproached Bhishma because he did not rather praise the other kings (a), such as the Bālhisika king Darada (b), or Karna (c), etc.; he compared Bhishma to the bird Bhālīṅga (d). Bhishma expressed his contempt for such talk. The kings became angry and proposed to kill Bhishma, who relied upon Kṛṣṇa (II, 44).—§ 291: Çiçupāla challenged Kṛṣṇa, being desirous to slay him with all the Pāṇḍavas. Kṛṣṇa related (a) how Çiçupāla, hearing that the Sātvatas had gone to Pragjyotiṣa, came and burnt Dvāraka; (b) that when king Bhoja was sporting on the Raivataka hill, he fell upon his attendants and threw many of them and led many away in chains to his own city; (c) in order to obstruct the sacrifice of Kṛṣṇa's father, he stole the sacrificial horse that had been let loose under the guard of armed men; (d) that he ravished the reluctant wife of Babru on her way from Hastinapura (so Nil.) to the Sauvīras; (e) that disguising himself in the attire of the Kārūsha king, he had ravished Bhadra Vaiçālī (i.e. daughter of the king of Viçāla, Nil.); (f) that he had desired Rukmiṇī, but failed to obtain her; (g) that he (Kṛṣṇa) had promised to pardon him 100 times, and that the number had now become full. Kṛṣṇa then thought of his discus, which came into his hand; therewith he instantly cut off the head of Çiçupāla; the kings beheld a fiery energy issuing out of the body of Çiçupāla and entering Kṛṣṇa's body; the sky, though cloudless, poured showers of rain, etc. Yudhishtira caused his brothers to perform the funeral rites of Çiçupāla, the son of Damaghosha; then he, with all the kings, installed the son of Çiçupāla in the sovereignty of the Cedis.—§ 292, v. He pierced the Prajāpati Dakṣa's sacrifice; D. and As. became stupefied, etc. (description); the Rahis performed propitiatory rites; Çiva tore out the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Puṣhan (with his foot); the gods recited the Çatarudriya. At last Çiva became gratified and the gods assigned a large share [of the sacrificial offerings] to him; the sacrifice, which had been severed into two pieces, became once more united. The Asuras had in days of yore three cities in the sky (of iron, silver, and gold respectively); Indra was unable to pierce them; the gods then repaired to Rudra (Çiva), who made Viṣṇu his shaft-head, etc. (γ), and pierced the city and burnt it together with the Asuras. Beholding Mahādeva (Çiva) transformed into a child with five locks of hair, lying upon the lap of Pārvatī, the latter asked the gods who he was. Indra resolved to kill him with his thunderbolt, but the child paralysed his arm; the gods and the Prajāpatīs could not realise that it was the lord of the universe, but Brahman by his penances found out that it was Mahādeva, and praised him, and so did the gods; Indra's arm became restored. Taking birth as Durvāsa, Çiva resided for a long time at Dvāravatī in my house. He is Rudra, etc. (δ) (XIII, 161). Kṛṣṇa continued: "Çiva has two forms: (1) one which is terrible (= Agni, lightning, and Sūrya) and engaged in all operations of destruction; (2) one which is mild and auspicious (= Righteousness, water, and the moon) and engaged in brahmacharya. These two forms again are subdivided into many forms. Half his body is Agni (fire), half is Soma (the moon)." Then Kṛṣṇa enumerated and explained many of Çiva's names, (e) R., D., G., and Aps. worship that emblem of his which is always erect and upraised. He loves to reside in crematoria, and there he burns and consumes all corpses; those persons who perform sacrifices there attain to the regions set apart for heroes. The brahmins know the Çatarudriya in the Veda and the adoration (upa-sthānam) [of the same name] which is composed by Vyāsa. Çiva created Agni from his mouth. The lordship of Çakra, etc., is verily his. It is he whose mouth is roaring in the waters of the sea in the form of the huge mare's head (XIII, 162): XIII, 161b, 7496; 162, 7503, 7511 (why he is so called).—§ 778b (Saṁvartta-Maruttiya): XIV, 8a, 193, 208, 210 (Ç. resides on Muñjavat, enumeration of his names (Çarva, etc.)).—§ 782g (Guruçishyasamv.): XIV, 43b, 1178 (paçānam içvaraḥ).—§ 795c (Mahābhārata): XVIII, 6, 258 (°śya bhavano).

[Çri-Vāsava-samvāda(h)] ("the discourse between Çri and Indra"). § 674b (Mokshadh.): Bhishma said: Nārada, who through his penance beholds both this and the other world at once, etc., wandered through the three worlds. Once at dawn he performed his ablutions in the Gaṅgā (Dhruvadvārahavām), and so did Indra. They listened to the narratives told by the great D.-r. They hymned the rising Sun, and then in the opposite direction beheld a luminous object riding on Vishṇu's vehicle adorned with Garuḍa and Sūrya; it was Śrī with many Aps. (description); her names: Padmā, etc. (a). She said that they had formerly dwelt with the Asuras in consequence of her disposition to be bound by truth and merit; seeing, however, that the Asuras had assumed perverse natures, she had left them and wished to reside with Indra. Requested by Indra, she told that she had dwelt with the Asuras on account of their good behaviour, but after they had fallen off from virtue, she had deserted Dai. and Dā. and had come to Indra; "there where I reside, the seven other goddesses (β) and Jayā as the eighth, who love me, etc., desire to live; all of them and myself, having deserted As., have come to thee." D.-r., Nārada, and Indra gave her a hearty welcome. Vāyu, the friend of Agni, began to blow gently; all the deities assembled; heaven began to shower nectar upon the region of Brahmān, etc.; Indra began to pour rain; no one deviated from the path of righteousness, etc.; D., K., Y., Ra. became cheerful, etc. (XII, 229).

* Çuka, pl. (°āḥ), "parrots." § 126 (Amçāvat.): I, 66, 2623 (the offspring of Çukī).

Çukābhipatana(m) ("the flying about" of Çuka): XII, 332-334 (12557-12649) (continued from Çuka-Nāradasamvāda, q.v.). § 716: Hearing the words of Nārada, Çuka understood that great misery follows the acquisition of children and wives, and that one has to undergo great labour in order to acquire science and Vedic lore. He resolved to attain to the highest end, that is fraught with the greatest felicity, and whence there is no return into the ocean of births; "that cannot be attained without yoga; I shall therefore have recourse to yoga, and throwing off this body I shall become transformed into wind and enter the Sun; for he does not wane like the Moon (Soma) with the gods; when after death one enters the moon he falls to earth and thence ascends to heaven; with the great Rishi I shall enter the energy of the Sun; I declare before all the creatures . . . earth, . . . D., Dā., G., P., U., Rā., and R., that I shall enter all creatures in the world." Obtaining Nārada's permission, Çuka went to Vyāsa, who asked him to stay there for the day that he might behold him for some time. But Çuka, only intent on emancipation, immediately left him and proceeded to Kailāsa, which was inhabited by crowds of ascetics (XII, 332). Having reached the summit of Kailāsa, Çuka set himself to practise yoga (description). Having then obtained the permission of Nārada, he soared into the skies and identified himself with the element of wind; Aps. (Pūṇacūḍā, etc.), G., R., etc., wondered. Çuka proceeded in silence, his face turned towards the east, regarding the sun; then to the Malaya mountain; Uvaçī and Pūrvacitti, who always dwell on Malaya, wondered. Çuka asked the gods, etc., to return his father an answer from him, if he should repeatedly call on him (XII, 333). Çuka freed himself of the four kinds of faults, the eight kinds of tamas, the five kinds of rajas, the attribute of sattva, and then dwelt in Brāhman. Meteors began to shoot, etc.; Indra poured showers of rain; Himavat and Meru (the one yellow, made of gold; the other white, made of silver), each 100 yojanas in height and breadth, were in close contact with each other. Journeying towards the north, Çuka clashed against them, and they were immediately broken in two. He was adored by G., R., Y., Rā., and Vidyādhara. He saw from a high region the celestial stream Mandūkī running below, with many Aps. Beholding Çuka, who was bodiless, those unclad aerial beings felt no shame. Vyāsa followed behind him on the same aerial path, by means of high Yoga. Çuka, above the region of the wind, identified himself with Brāhman. R. represented to Vyāsa the achievements of his son. He indulged in lamentations; Çuka, who had entered the universe, had become the soul of everything, and had acquired omnipresence, answered by uttering bho in the form of an echo, and the entire universe echoed the answer of Çuka from that time; mountain caves and mountain sides still echo sounds uttered there. Having cast off all the attributes of sound, etc., and showing his yoga prowess in the manner of his disappearance, Çuka in this way attained to the highest station. Vyāsa sat down and began to think of his son with grief; the Aps. who were sporting on the banks of the celestial stream Mandākinī saw him seated there, and all became agitated with shame. Çiva, with D., G., and great R., came and comforted Vyāsa, who by the favour of Çiva thenceforward always beheld a shadow of his son by his side. "This Nārada and Vyāsa repeatedly told me in days of yore" (XII, 334). [PCR. rightly remarks that, according to this story, Çuka who recited the Bhāgavata to Parikshit, the grandson of Yudhishtira, could not possibly be the Çuka who was Vyāsa's son.]

Çukakṛti(h) ("the works of Çuka"). § 713 (Mokshadh.): XII, 326-7 (12215-12311) (continuation of Çukotpatti). Bhishma said to Yudhishtira: Vyāsa desired Çuka to study the Mokshadharma; Çuka mastered all the treatises on yoga, as also the science promulgated by Kapila. Then Vyāsa caused him to go to Janaka, the king of Mithilā, and not to the skies (by his yoga power); nor should he think himself superior to Janaka, though he was only his yājya. Crossing the Varshas of Meru and Hari and Himavat (Meror Hareṣ ca dve varṣe varṣaṃ Haimavatān tataḥ), Çuka came to Bhūratavaraha. Having seen many countries inhabited by Cinas and Ilāpas, he reached Āryāvarta, and at last the country of the Videhas, protected by Janaka, and then Mithilā. He had not been fatigued on the way. He obtained permission to enter the city, but was at first roughly forbidden to enter the palace. At last he was admitted into the first chamber; thence he was led into the second chamber by the minister, and thence into a garden that was like a second Caitraratha, with damsels equal to the Aps., who entertained Çuka and gave him to eat; he, however, went unaffected through his rites, and in the first part of the night he devoted himself to yoga (XII, 326). The next morning he was received by Janaka, and was instructed by him about moksha and the duties of a brahman; "ordinarily the purified understanding necessary for attaining moksha cannot be obtained without passing through all four stages of religious life; but he who in the course of many births has obtained a pure mind, may attain to moksha even in the very first stage (i.e. brahmacarya), and then there is no need for the three other stages," quoting a saying of king Yayāti; "through the favour of thy father I have acquired to omniscience; thy knowledge is much greater than what you think it to be" (XII, 327). (For continuation v. Çukakṛtya.)

Çukakṛtya(m) ("the works of Çuka"). § 714 (Mokshadh.): XII, 328-9 (12312-12421) (continuation of Çukakṛti). Bhishma said to Yudhishtira: Having heard the words of Janaka, having entered Soul by [his] soul and having seen Self by his self (ātmanam ātmanāsthāya dṛṣṭvā cātmanam ātmanā), Çuka without putting further questions to Janaka, proceeded northwards to Çaiçira (through the air). At that time Nārada proceeded to Himavat (b). Then Çuka came to the asylum of Vyāsa. One day the disciples asked Vyāsa to let no sixth disciple be skilled in the Veda. Vyāsa answered that they ought to multiply, and the Veda to be spread, and taught them the qualifications of persons that can be accepted as disciples, and the rules in respect of the study of the Veda (XII, 328). The disciples of Vyāsa took leave of him and descended from the mountain to the earth for the purpose of subdividing the Vedas; there they performed the agniṣṭoma, etc., at the sacrifices of Brahmans, Kahuttriyas, and Vuṣṭyas, and taught the Veda. Vyāsa remained with Çuka, passing his days in anxious thoughtfulness. Nārada came and asked him why Vedic sounds were silent now, so that the mountain now resembled a hamlet of Nishadas, and R., D., and G. did no longer shine as before; and exhorted Vyāsa to recite the Veda and thereby dispel the fears arising from Rā. Vyāsa and Çuka then set themselves to recite the Veda. One day a violent wind arose which Vyāsa declared to be an omen that the recitation of the Veda should be suspended; and he explained the Decayāna and the Pitryāna, and the Winds (Samāna, etc. [g]; cf. Sādhyāḥ), especially Pravaha (h), Āvaha (i), Udraha (j), Samvaha (k), Viraha (l), Parivaha (m), Parāvaha (n); "this wind is the breath of Vishnu's nostrils." Having said this Vyāsa plunged into the celestial Ganges. (For continuation v. Çuka-Nāradasamvāda.)

Çuka-Nārada-samvāda(h) ("conversation between Ç. and N."). § 715 (Mokshadh.): XII, 330-332 (12422-12556) (continued from Çukakṛtya). Bhishma said to Yudhishtira: Nārada then came to Çuka for the object of asking Çuka the meaning of certain portions of the Veda. Nārada related what Sanatkumāra had said in days of yore to certain Rshis about avoiding attachment, etc., in order to attain to final emancipation; "with the aid of such instructions the deities succeeded in leaving the earth and became the denizens of heaven." (For continuation v. Çukābhīpatana.)

Çukapraçṇābhigamana. § 10 (Puruṣasūtr.): I, 2, 352 (= XII, 232, foll.?).

Çukara, pl. (°āḥ), a people. § 295 (Dyūtap.): II, 52, 1882 (their king gave hundreds of elephants as tribute to Yudhishtira).

Çukasya āçrama(m), a tīrtha. § 370 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 85, 8184.

Çukī. § 126 (Amṣāvat.): I, 66, 2620 (daughter of Tāmra), 2623 (mother of the parrots).—§ 127 (Amṣāvat.): I, 66, 2633 (the same (?), daughter of Anulā).

Çukla¹, one or two Pāṇḍava warriors. § 592 (Samçaptakavādhap.): VII, 230, 1006 (description of his horses).—§ 608 (Karmap.): VIII, 560v, 2736 (among eight Pāṇḍavas who are attacked by Karna).

Çukla² = Çiva (1000 names¹⁻²).

Çukladhvajapatākin = Çiva (1000 names¹).

Çukotpatti(h) ("origin of Çuka"). § 712 (Mokshadh.): XII, 324-325 (12158-12214). Questioned by Yudhishtira about Çuka, whose mind became bent on Brāhman when he was a mere boy, Bhishma answered: The R. did not make merit depend upon age, etc., but upon the study of the Vedas and upon tapas; the merit of 1,000 horse-sacrifices or 100 rājapryas cannot come up to even ¼ of the merit that arises from yoga. Once on the summit of Meru, Mahādeva sported with his followers and Purātī, while Vyāsa, devoted to yoga and dhāraṇā, practised austerities for 100 years for the sake of obtaining a son, subsisting on air alone, adoring Mahādeva. Thither went R., B., P., Lp., S., V., Ā., R., Sarya, Candramas, Indra, M., the Oceans, the Ruers, A., D., G., Nārada, Parvata, Viçvārasi, Si., and Aps. This has been told to me by Mārkaṇḍeya. Çiva granted him that he would have a son like to Fire, Wind, Earth, Water, and Space, and devoted to Brāhman (XII, 324). Vyāsa was one day employed in rubbing his sticks to make a fire, when he beheld the Aps. Ghṛtācī, and fell in love with her. When she approached, transformed into a she-parrot, he dropped his seed, which became a son, who, from this circumstance, came to be called by the name of Çuka. Gaṅgā came and bathed him in her waters; G. sung, and Aps. danced, etc. Viçvāvasu, Tumburu, Na., Hāhā, and Hūhū eulogized the birth of Çuka; there came Lp. with Çakra, D., D.-r., and B.-r.; Māruta showered celestial flowers; Çiva, together with Pārvati, invested Çuka with the sacred thread; Çakra gave him a celestial kamandalu and celestial robes, etc. As soon as Çuka was born, the Vedas, including the mysteries and abstracts (sarhasyāḥ sasangrahāḥ), came to dwell in him, just as they dwelt in his father. Çuka selected Brhaspati for his preceptor, remembering the universal practice. Having studied the Vedas, the tradition (itihāsam), and the state policy (rājasastrāṇi), Çuka returned home, after paying his preceptor the tuition fee. Adopting the vow of a brahmachārīn he practised the hardest penances, even in his childhood. Taking no pleasure in the three modes of life (the domestic, etc.), he only kept in view the law of emancipation (mokṣadharmānudarśināḥ) (XII, 325). (For continuation v. Çukakṛti.)

[Çyena-kapotākhyāna(m)] ("the story of the hawk and the pigeon"). § 738b (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhīshma said: Once

a pigeon, pursued by a hawk, dropped down from the skies and sought the protection of the Kāci king R.-r. Vṛshadarbha (or Uçinara), etc. [cf. Çyenakapotiya (§ 411 = III, 130 foll.), but here the birds are not Indra and Agni]. The three worlds together with Indra came to behold the king; he was bathed in a shower of nectar, etc.; D., G., and Aps. began to sing and dance around him, just as they do around Brahmān; he then ascended a celestial chariot and proceeded to the eternal heaven. Blessing upon the reader.

Çyenakapotiya(m) ("the episode relating to the hawk and the pigeon"). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 448 (°m upākhyānam). — § 411 (Plakshav.): Indra in the shape of a hawk and Agni in that of a pigeon in fear of the hawk came to test king Uçinara's merit (III, 130). Uçinara in vain offered the hawk another beast, and thereafter his kingdom, in order that he might spare the pigeon ("he who slays a brahman, he who slaughters a cow, the common mother of all the worlds, and he who forsakes one asking for protection, are equally sinful"); at last the hawk agreed upon receiving the pigeon's weight of Uçinara's flesh; Uçinara cut portion after portion of his flesh and placed it in the balance, and as it did not outweigh the pigeon he mounted the scale himself, utterly devoid of flesh. Then Indra said: "As long as man shall speak of thee, so long . . . thou shalt inhabit the holy regions." Saying this Indra ascended to heaven, and so did king Uçinara in a radiant shape, after having filled heaven and earth with his merits (III, 131).

Çyenī. § 126 (Amçavat.): I, 66, 2620 (daughter of Tāmra), 2621 (mother of the hawks). — § 127 (do.): I, 66, 2632 (wife of Aruṇa and mother of Sampāti and Jaṭāyus).

[Dakṣha-yajña - vināça(h)] ("the destruction of Dakṣha's sacrifice"). § 695b (Mokṣadh.): Vaiçampāyana(!) said: In days of yore Dakṣha made arrangements for performing a sacrifice on the top of Himavat in that sacred region inhabited by R. and Si., G. and Aps., where the Gangā issues out of the mountains. The gods, etc. (α), came there. R. Dadhīca in wrath and grief said that this was no sacrifice, since Rudra (Çiva) was not adored in it, etc.; he, the great yogin, saw into the future; he beheld Çiva seated with Nārada and Umā. Dakṣha said he knew the eleven Rudras with lances and matted locks, but he did not know who this Maheçvara was. Dakṣha said that he would perform the sacrifice unto Vishṇu. Umā felt grief. Çiva said that it is to him as the Lord of Sacrifices that the chanters utter their praises in sacrifices, etc. (β). Then he created from his mouth a terrible being (description), and Umā herself, assuming the terrible form of Mahakālī, proceeded in the company of that being, that was the living embodiment of Çiva's wrath and resembled Çiva himself, and came to be called Virabhadra. He then created from the pores of his body a large number of spirit-chiefs named Raumyas. These Rudras attacked the sacrifice (description; R., D., and men looked pale) and began to set fire to everything, and tore off the head of the sacrifice. D. and Brahmān and Dakṣha, informed by Virabhadra, hymned Çiva (γ), who, asked by Dakṣha, granted to him the boon that his sacrificial articles should be of use to him. Dambhodbhavopākhyāna(m) ("the episode relating to Dambhodbhava"). (Cf. Dambhodbhavasya ākhyānam.) § 563 (Bhagavady.): There was a king of yore named Dambhodbhava, who was at the head of the earth; his sovereignty extended over the whole world. Every morning he used to ask if there were anyone superior or even equal to himself. Certain brahmins counselled him to curb his pride; and as he continued to ask the brahmins the same question day after day, some high-souled brahmins mentioned to him the ascetics Nara and Nārāyaṇa, "who have taken their birth in the race of men, and are now practising penances on Gandhamādāna." The king marched to the spot with a large army, and found them emaciated with hunger and thirst, etc. He desired a battle with them. The Rahis declined; but as he repeatedly summoned them to fight, Nara took up a handful of grass-blades, and therewith baffled all their arrows and cut off the eyes and ears and noses of the warriors. The king fell at the feet of the Rahis and said, "Let me be blessed." Nara then told him to be obedient to the brahmins and be virtuous. The king returned to his city, and from that time began to practise righteousness.

In a wood like Castriratha, Indra transformed himself into wind and mixed up the clothes of some bathing maidens. A quarrel about the clothes resulted in D.'s being thrown into a well by Çarmishthā, the daughter of Vṛshaparvan. Yayāti found her and drew her up by her right hand, and then returned to his capital. Devayānī sent Ghāṛṇika to inform Çukra of what had passed (I, 78-79). Çukra threatened Vṛshaparvan that he would leave the Asuras, until Çarmishthā, together with 1,000 maidens, was given to D. (I, 80). Surrounded by Çarmishthā and 2,000 maidens, Devayānī one day again met Yayāti, who at her request received her in marriage from Çukra, and promised that he would never invite Çarmishthā to share his bed (I, 81): I, 78, 3284, 3285, (3285), 3290, (3297), 3302, (3303), 3307, (3309), 3314; 79, 3319, 3321, (3326); 80, 3341, 3343, 3344, (3345); 3346, (3347), 3348, 3350, 3351, (3354), 3356, (3357); 81, 3359, 3363, 3364, (3367), (3370), (3373), (3375), 3376, (3377), (3379), (3382), (3383), 3386, (3388), 3392, 3395.—§ 147: Devayānī gave birth to a son. After 1,000 years had elapsed, Çarmishthā attained to puberty and prevailed upon Yayāti to beget a son also with her (I, 82); to Devayānī she said that she had born the child to a ṛshī whose name she had not dared to ask. The sons of Devayānī were Yadu and Turvasu, those of Çarmishthā were Druhyanu, Anu, and Puru. One day, when Devayānī was walking in the wood together with Yayāti, she met the children of Çarmishthā and asked them: "Who is your father?" They then pointed to Yayāti. Devayānī in anger withdrew to Uçanas, followed by Yayāti. Uçanas cursed Yayāti to be overcome by decrepitude, yet with the permission of transferring it to someone else, and he added that that son of Yayāti who would give him his own youth should succeed Yayāti on the throne, etc. (I, 83): I, 82, 3397, 3398, 3400, 3401, 3404, 3411, 3419; 83, 3424, 3425, (3425), (3428), (3430), 3432, 3434, (3436), (3437), 3439, (3442), 3446, (3451), 3461.—§ 148 (Yayāti): I, 85, 3519 (°yāḥ sutam . . . Yadum).—§ 156 (Pūruvaṃç.): I, 95, ††3761 (Uçanaso duhita), 3762 (Yaduṃ ca Turvasuṃ caiva Dṛi vyajāyata).—§ 569 (Bhagavadgāyā): V, 149, 5045 (Yaduḥ . . . D'yāḥ sutah).—§ 596 (Shoçacarāj., v. [Dhundhumāropākhyāna(m)] ("the episode about the slayer of Dhundhu"). Cf. Dhaundumāra(m) upākhyāna(m). § 474 (Mārkaṇḍ.): The great rishi Utlāṅka, in his hermitage in the wilderness, by severe penances for numberless years obtained that Vishṇu appeared to him, and having been praised by him (vv. 13494–13503) (a), granted him that he should always remain virtuous and devoted to Vishṇu, and that he should obtain a yoga power and urge Kuvālūçva (son of Bṛhadāçva of Ikshvāku's race), who had been furnished with yoga power from Vishṇu, to kill the Asura Dhundhu (III, 201).—§ 475: After the death of Ikshvāku, Çaçāda was king in Ayodhya. List of Çaçāda's descendants: Çaçāda > Kakutstha > Anenas > Prthu > Viçvagaçva > Adri > Yuvanāçva > Çrāva > Çrāvastaku (who built Çrāvasti) > Bṛhadāçva > Kuvālūçva > 21,000 sons.—§ 476: Having installed Kuvālūçva on the throne, Bṛhadāçva retired into the forest as an ascetic. Then Utlāṅka asked him first to slay the Daitya chief Dhundhu (son of Madhu and Kaitabha), who dwelt underground in the sea Ujjālaka, which was full of sand, in the desert, practised austerities with a view to destroy the gods and the three worlds, Brahmān having granted him that he could not be slain by gods, Daityas, Rākshasas, Yakshas, and Gandharvas. "Every year, when he sleeps covered with sand and begins to breathe, the earth trembles for seven days, and the sand raised by his breath shrouds the sun." He then told him the boon granted by Vishṇu (see § 474) (III, 202). They agreed that Kuvālūçva should slay the Daitya, and Bṛhadāçva retired to the forest.—§ 477: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related: During the cataclysm, when Vishṇu, wearing a crown and the Kaustubha, and dressed in yellow (pīta) silk, stretched over many yojanas, lay sleeping on the hood of Çesha, who encircled the earth, and a lotus sprang from his navel, and from that lotus Brahmdn, who is the four Vedas with four faces, the Dānavas Madhu and Kaiṣabha began to terrify Brahmdn. Viṣṇu awoke, and offered to grant them a boon, and as they wished to grant him a boon, he chose that they should be slain by him, and at their request he promised to slay them on a wholly uncovered spot, and that they should become his sons; as only his thighs were uncovered, he there cut off their heads with his discus (III, 203).—§ 478: Their son was Dhundhu. Description of his penances, and the boon he obtained from Brahmdn, etc. (see § 476). When Kuvalācva, with his 21,000 sons and his troops, and Uttanka set out, an aerial voice was heard, the gods showered flowers, etc., and the gods, Gandharvas, and great ṛṣhis came to behold the encounter. At the request of Uttanka, Viṣṇu filled Kuvalācva with his own energy. He let his sons excavate the sea of sands in seven days, and then they aroused the Dānava, assailing him with arrows, etc. He swallowed the arrows and vomited flames, which consumed all the sons of Kuvalācva, but were extinguished by a stream of water flowing from the body of Kuvalācva, who then burnt him with the Brahmastra, whence he was named Dhundhumāra ("slayer of Dhundhu"). The gods and great ṛṣhis granted him the boon that he should always be able to give wealth to brahmins, etc. Then the gods and great ṛṣhis went away to their abodes. Kuvalācva had three sons left—Dyṛḥācva, Kapilācva, and Candrācva, from whom sprang the Ikshvāku kings. Blessing upon the reader (III, 204).

The wife of Dīrghatamas was a brāhmaṇī,

Pradoshi by name. With her he begat Gautama and other sons; and he (Dīrghatamas), who knew the Vedas and Āngas, having learnt the Godharma (i.e. prakāçamaitihuna, Nil.) from Saurabhya (i.e. son of the Kāmadhenu, Nil.) began to practise it. He therefore was excluded by the ṛshis from the asylum, and accosted in harsh words by his wife, who said that she would no more support him and his children. Dīrghatamas then established the rule that from that day every woman should have to adhere to one husband for life, whether he were dead or alive, etc. She then caused her sons to tie him on a raft and throw him into the Gaṅgā. Drifting along, he passed through the territories of many kings, until he was taken up by king Bali, who wanted him to raise up offspring. But Bali's queen Sudeshṇā, who saw that he was blind, sent a Çūdra woman in her stead, who was her nurse, with whom the ṛshi begat eleven sons, Kakshvat, etc. As these sons were his own and not Bali's, Bali sent Sudeshṇā to him, and Dīrghatamas, after merely touching her person, told her: "Thou shalt have five children named Āṅga, Vaṅga, Kālīṅga, Puṇḍra, and Suhma." Their dominions have come to be called after their names: I, 104, 4192, 4198, (4202), 4218.—§ 266 (Çakrasabhāv.): II, 7, 293 (in the palace of Indra).—§ 717b (Nārāyaṇiya): XII, 342, 13182 (originally he, on account of his blindness, was called D., but when he had been cured by invoking Nārāyaṇa as Keçava, he was called Gotama).—§ 775 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 166κ, 7668 (among the ṛshis of the west). Draupadiharana(m) parva. § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 325 (i.e. Draupadiharanaparvan).

[Draupadiharanaparvan] ("the carrying away of Draupadī," the 46th of the minor parvas of Mbh.). (Cf. Draupadiharana(m) parva.) § 521: While Duryodhana, Duḥśāsana, Karṇa, and Çakuni were longing to harm the Pāṇḍavas, Durvāsas arrived with 10,000 disciples, and harassed Duryodhana with his whimsical and insolent behaviour; but as Duryodhana was neither angered nor annoyed, he granted him a boon. According to what had been agreed upon between himself and Karṇa and Duḥśāsana, Duryodhana asked Durvāsas to visit the Pāṇḍavas with his disciples; when Draupadī, after having regaled the brahmins, etc., with food, would have gone to rest. Durvāsas promised to do so (III, 262). Then Durvāsas one day came to the Pāṇḍavas with 10,000 disciples, when the meal was over and Kṛṣṇā was reposing. Kṛṣṇā then praised Kṛṣṇa, who, leaving Ruḥṣiṇī, who was sleeping by his side, came to her and demanded something to eat. Draupadī became embarrassed, because the sun-given vessel only remained full till she had finished her meal, and therefore now was empty. At the request of Kṛṣṇa she, however, fetched the vessel, and Kṛṣṇa found a particle of rice and vegetable sticking at its rim, and swallowing it he said to her: "May it please the god who is the soul of the universe (viçvātma), and may the partaker of sacrifices (yajñabhuk) be satisfied." Then he ordered Bhīma (B. Sahadeva) to invite the munis to dinner. Meanwhile those ascetics, having bathed in the river, observed that their stomachs were full, and as Durvāsas feared that the Pāṇḍavas would destroy them, looking down upon them with angry eyes, because the repast had been uselessly prepared for them ("I am afraid," said Durvāsas,

"of men that are devoted to Havi"), they all ran away, so that Bhīma (B. Sahadeva) sought for them in vain. As the Pāṇḍavas were afraid that the munis might return at night and curse them, Kṛṣṇa suddenly appeared and consoled them. Then he repaired to his capital (III, 263).—§ 522: One day when the Pāṇḍavas had gone a-hunting, leaving Draupadī in the hermitage with the permission of the great ṛṣi Tṛṇabindu and of Dhauṃya, the king of Sindhū (of Sauvira, v. 15599; of the Çibis, Sauviras, Sindhū, etc., 15621), Jayadratha Vārdhahashattri, who, with a view of matrimony, was on his way to the king of the Çāleeyas, halted in the wood of Kāmyaka, and seeing Draupadī standing at the threshold of the hermitage, he fell in love with her, and sent king Koṭikāśya (king Suratha's son, v. 15593; the foremost of the Çibis, v. 15602) to inquire who she was (III, 264). Koṭikāśya introduced himself to Draupadī and showed her the Trigarta king Kshemankara, and the son of the king of the Kulindas ("who always lives in the mountains"), and the son of Subala (B. Subhava) of the race of Ikshvāku; he said that Jayaśratha was there at the head of 6,000 chariots, etc., followed by twelve Sauvira princes as his standard-bearers (Āṅāraka, etc., enumerated) (a), and his brothers (Balāhaka, Anika, Vidārana, etc.) (III, 265). Draupadī told Koṭikāśya who she was, and that her husbands were out a-hunting (Yudhishtira to the east, Bhīma towards the south, Arjuna to the west, and the Açvins towards the north), and invited them to alight and await the return of the Pāṇḍavas (III, 266). Koṭikāśya told Jayadratha the words of Draupadī, and exhorted him to take her with him to the Sauviras. Jayadratha introduced himself to Draupadī, who offered him water for washing his feet, and promised him fifty animals for breakfast and various kinds of deer, etc., etc. (enumerated), when Yudhishtira returned. Jayadratha asked her to leave the miserable Pāṇḍavas and become his wife (III, 267), but was severely rebuked by Draupadī, who threatened him with the Pāṇḍavas. As Jayadratha said, "We too belong by birth to the seventeen high clans, and look down upon the Pāṇḍavas," she threatened him with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, and the Andhakas, Vṛṣṇis, and Kaikēyas, and called upon Dhauṃya. Jayadratha seized her by her upper garment; Draupadī pushed him so that he fell upon the ground; but at last she was obliged to ascend his chariot, while Dhauṃya followed amidst Jayadratha's infantry (III, 268). When the Pāṇḍavas again met, Yudhishtira knew from the shrill cries of the birds that the forest had been invaded by hostile intruders, and he caused them to give up the chase and drive home on their great chariots drawn by Saindhava horses. A yellow jackal on their left indicated the violence done. Indrasena learned what had happened from the weeping foster-sister of Draupadī, and then they pursued and overtook Jayadratha, who was greatly alarmed (III, 269). Draupadī, asked by Jayadratha, pointed out to him each of the five Pāṇḍavas, and advised him to throw down his arms and seek the protection of Yudhishtira, at the top of whose flagstaff two tabours called Nanda and Upananda are constantly played. The Pāṇḍavas, leaving the panic-stricken infantry alone, rushed upon the charioteers [so PCR., who seems to have read rathānikam, which is, to be sure, the right reading, instead of yathānikam, which occurs both in C. and B.] (III, 270). Bhīma with his iron mace (sarvaçaikyāyastm gadām), embossed with gold, rushed towards Jayadratha, who was defended by Koṭikāśya. The Trigarta king, who had killed the four steeds of Yudhishtira with his mace, was himself killed by Yudhishtira, who then, together with Indrasena, mounted the chariot of Sahadeva. Nakula killed Keshamānkara and Mahāmukha, and was compelled by the Trigarta king Suratha (whom he killed?) to mount Bhīma's chariot. Bhīma put Kōṭikāśya to flight and slew him. Arjuna killed the twelve Sauvira heroes, etc.; Jayadratha put Draupadī down and fled. Yudhishtira, seeing Draupadī and Dhaumya walking in front, caused her to be taken up on the chariot of Sahadeva. Arjuna advised Bhīma to refrain from slaying the remnant of the Saindhava host. Bhīma prevailed upon Yudhishtira to return to the hermitage with the twins and Draupadī and Dhaumya, while he himself would find out and slay Jayadratha. Yudhishtira entreated him not to slay him, remembering Duḥṣalā and Gāndhārī; but Draupadī indignantly required that he should be slain, and Bhīma and Arjuna went in search of him. In the hermitage Yudhishtira found Mūrkaṇḍeya and many other brahmins and ascetics, who were greatly bewailing the lot of Draupadī. Meanwhile Arjuna killed the horses of Jayadratha, though they were a full kroṣa ahead of him. Jayadratha was then overtaken by Bhīma, but Arjuna entreated Bhīma not to kill him (III, 271).

[Draupadīparitāpavākya(m)] ("the complaints of Draupadī"; cf. Arjunābhigamanaparvan). § 325 : While they were conversing in the evening, filled with sorrow, Kṛṣṇa, who wondered at the hardheartedness of Duryodhana, Karna, Çakuni, and Duḥçāsana, who were the only four that did not shed tears at their being exiled, and who lamented their present state so different from their former happiness, tried to excite Yudhishtira to revenge himself (III, 27).—§ 326 : Draupadī related the old story of the conversation between Prahlāda (the chief of the Asuras and the Dānavas, well versed in the mysteries of the science of duty) and his grandson Bali Vairocana, in which Prahlāda told Bali that neither might nor forgiveness is invariably meritorious, and then she said : "I therefore consider, O king! that time has come for thee to put forth thy might" (III, 28).—§ 327 : Yudhishtira maintained that a wise man should ever forgive his persecutor; that wrath has been given to man for the destruction of the world; and cited gāthās of the forgiving Kāçyapa : "Forgiveness is virtue, sacrifice, the Vedas, etc.; men of forgiveness obtain regions in the Brahmaloka; when one forgives everything, then he becomes brāhman (brahma sampadyate); this and the other world belongs to him who forgives; etc." (III, 29). From the fact that pious persons are often unhappy (v. 1133, Yudhishtira is said to have performed the acvamedha (!), rājasūya, pundarika, and gosava sacrifices) and vicious persons happy, Draupadī concludes that Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ have clouded Yudhishtira's senses, that it is folly to aspire to final emancipation (moksha), that the consequences of acts are inevitable, that God (Īçvara, Dhātṛ, Scayambhū Prapitāmaha) makes creatures to work as a wooden doll is made to move its limbs by a wire-puller, etc., and causes them to destroy each other, that God does not behave towards his creatures like a father or mother, but like a vicious person; either God is sinful, or Might (and not God) is the true cause of acts, and then those are to be pitied that have no might (III, 30). Yudhishtira censured Kṛṣṇa for her atheism (ndatikya), saying that one should not act virtuously from the desire of reaping fruits, but because it is ordained so by the Veda, the ancient religion revealed by the ṛshis, and because it is the conduct of the good and wise; neither should one doubt virtue or religion nor censure God, by whose grace mortal man, by piety, acquires immortality. For though we may not see the results, being mysterious even to the gods, and the illusion (māyā) of the gods is mysterious to us, yet virtue and vice are not fruitless, as may be seen from the examples of Vyāsa, Varishta, Maitreya, Nārada, Lomaça, Çuka, and other ṛshis, who by virtue have become superior even to the gods; as also from her own and Dhṛṣṭadyumna's birth; nor would men have practised virtue, generation after generation, if asceticism, etc., were useless, and no one would pursue salvation (nirvāṇa), but they would live like beasts, and why should ṛshis, gods, Gandharvas, Rākshasas, and Asuras, who are above human conditions (īçvaraḥ), cherish virtue? He who, trusting the proofs of his own reasoning, rejects other authority or doubts religion and virtue, loses this and yonder world, and is lower than even çūdras and robbers (III, 31). Kṛṣṇa said that she did not slander religion nor disregard God (Īçvara, Prajāpati, Mahēçvara); it was affliction that had extorted these words from her. She maintained that besides what a man obtains from Necessity (haṭha), Fate (daiva), Accident (svabhāva), and deeds in a former life (karman) (all of which might be reduced to the last item, also called adṛçya), which God distributes, there are also things of which man himself is the cause, working through his own intelligence and exertion. It is by exertion (utthāna; the explanation of Nīl. here seems to be inadmissible) that all creatures live, even Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ, as well as the crane on the water. Those who believe only in Destiny (dishta) or Necessity are both the meanest among men. On the other hand, if God were not the giver of good and bad fruits, there would not be any creature that was miserable, and all exertions would be successful. Manu himself declares that a man should act; and if he works, even if he be not successful, his debt is cancelled. "Having exerted thyself, thou wilt know what the fruit of thy exertions will be. The tiller tills the soil with the plough, and sows the seed thereon; he then sits silent, for the clouds are now the cause; and if no ruin favours him, the tiller is without blame . . . If, however, no exertion is made, there can be no success . . . All this, uttered by Dhṛṣṇaspati himself, a learned brahman said to my father and my brothers; from them I heard it" (III, 32). Bhīma tried to prevail upon Yudhishtira that (especially as they had lost the sovereignty by his carelessness) he should make war with the Dhṛṣṇa-rāshṭras, aided by the Srñjayas and Kaikeyas and Kṛṣṇa, maintaining that a man should practise virtue (dharma) for the sake of gaining wealth (artha), and acquire wealth for the sake of pleasure (kāma), but neither for its own sake; that might and energy (and the protecting of the subjects) constitute the virtue of the Kshatriya, and that deviation from the virtues of one's own order is never laudable; that the Asuras, though older brothers in possession of power and abundance, were all vanquished by the gods through stratagem; that as wealth should be spent by one who wishes to increase his wealth, just as seeds are scattered on the ground, thus a person who throws away a little of his virtue like seeds (dharma) in order to gain a larger measure of virtue is regarded as wise, and that whatever sin a monarch commits in acquiring dominion, he cancels it all afterwards by sacrifices and by bestowing villages, etc., on brahmins (III, 33). Yudhishtira declared that he was unable to violate the pledge, and that it was now too late for Bhīma to use harsh words (III, 34). Bhīma said that only he whose life is unlimited, or who knows what the period of his life is, has time to wait; they ought to strive for the possession of the kingdom before they died; "if a man, slaying his injurer, goes the very day into hell, that hell becomes heaven to him; the pain one feels in having to suppress his wrath is more burning than fire itself; . . . thou art kind like a brahmin, how hast thou been born in the Kṣatriya order? those who are born in this order are generally of cruel hearts; thou hast heard the duties of kings, as promulgated by Manu, cruel and fraught with crookedness and opposed to tranquillity (śama); moreover, we will not be able to live unknown, as we are known all over the world, and many kings, who have been expelled by us from their kingdoms, and robbed and exiled by us, will assist Duryodhana and set against us numerous spies in disguise; we have now lived in the woods for thirteen months, which may be regarded as so many years, as pūtikas (see BR. and Nil.) are a substitute for the soma; or one may free himself from this sin by offering food to a bull" (see Nil.) (III, 35).

Draupadīputra, pl. ("the sons of Draupadī") = Draupadeya, pl.: VI, 1655, 2755; X, 365.

[Draupadī - sambhava(h)] ("origin of Draupadī"). § 218 (Caitrarathap.): Distressed and thinking of revenging himself on Droṇa, not contented with his children and relatives, king Drupada wandered along the Yamunā and the Gaṅgā and came to a hermitage of brahmins, and prevailed upon Yāja (δ) to perform a sacrifice for him, assisted by his brother Upayāja, in order to obtain a son who might slay Droṇa. Then Yāja summoned the queen (Prṣhātī, v. 6390; Pārshatī, v. 6405; "daughter-in-law of Prṣhata," PCR.), but she said that she was not fit for accepting the offspring (?), her mouth being unclean (avalipta) and her person perfumed. Yāja replied: "Since the sacrifice has been prepared (śrapitaṃ) by Yāja and sanctified by Upayāja's invocations (abhimantritaṃ), it shall produce its effect whether thou comest or waitest." Then arose from the flames a boy with a crown on his head, his body being arrayed in excellent armour, sword in hand and carrying a bow and arrows, sending forth loud roars, and immediately ascending a chariot. A great invisible being in the skies said that he would destroy Droṇa, etc. After this Pāṇḍalī arose from the centre of the vedī, and a voice, not coming from a visible body, said that she would be the cause of the destruction of many kṣatriyas. At the birth of both children the Pāṇḍalas shouted with joy. The queen was regarded as their mother. Then the brahmins gave to the boy the name of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, on account of his audacity, etc. (dhṛṣṭatvād atidhṛṣṇutvād dyumnadyutsambhavād api, v. 6406), and to the girl that of Kṛṣṇā, on account of her dark complexion (v. 6407). Droṇa brought Dhṛṣṭadyumna to his own abode, and taught him the use of all weapons, considering that destiny is inevitable (I, 167).

[Draupadī - Satyabhāmā - samvādaparvan] ("conversation between Draupadī and Satyabhāmā," the 42nd of the minor parvas of Mbh.). § 510: After the brahmins and Pāṇḍavas had taken their seats, Draupadī and Satyabhāmā Sātrājīti, the favourite wife of Kṛṣṇa, entered the hermitage. Satyabhāmā asked Draupadī how she made the Pāṇḍavas obedient to her, in order that she herself might by the same means secure the affection of Kṛṣṇa.

Draupadī warned her against using drugs, incantations, etc., which were used by wicked women, and said that she kept aloof from vanity and served the Pāṇḍavas with devotion, etc. Formerly, in the palace of Yudhishtira at Indraprastha, food was daily given to 8,000 brahmins, 80,000 śūdras with thirty serving-maids assigned to each, 10,000 yatis; he had 100,000 well-dressed serving-maids with bracelets, etc., all skilled in singing and dancing; 100,000 maidservants who day and night used to feed guests; 100,000 horses, and 100,000 elephants. And it was Draupadī who had the supervision of all this; she knew the names and features of all the girls, and knew everything about them, and even about the cowherds and shepherds. She alone knew the income and expenditure of the king and what their whole wealth was, bearing hunger and thirst, and being the first to wake up and the last to go to bed (III, 233). Draupadī said that for women there is no god equal to the husband, as it is from him the wife obtains offspring, articles of enjoyment, fame, and heaven itself hereafter. In order to attract the heart of Kṛṣṇa, Satyabhāmā ought to let him understand that she adored him with all her heart by promptly, when she saw him enter her chamber, offering him a seat and water to wash his feet; and even if he ordered a maidservant to do anything, she ought to get up and do it herself; not to blab of whatever he should speak before her; feed those that were dear to him, and keep herself aloof from those that were hostile to him; not to stay or converse in private even with her sons Pradyumna and Çāmba; and shun wicked women (III, 234).—§ 511: Then Kṛṣṇa bade farewell to the Pāṇḍavas and to Mārkandeya, etc., and called for Satyabhāmā. Satyabhāmā comforted Draupadī, saying that she would soon recover her ancient happiness, and relating of Prativindhya, Çrutasoma, and Çrutakarman (her son by Arjuna), and Çātānika (her son by Nakula), and Çrutasena (her son by Sahadeva), that they were well and skilled in weapons and, like Abhimanyu, delighted with staying at Dvāravati, and were loved by Subhadrā, Pradyumna, Kṛṣṇa, with his son Bhānu, etc., and her mother-in-law, and all the Andhakas and Vṛshnis, with Rāma, etc. Then Satyabhāmā mounted the chariot of Kṛṣṇa and they set out for his city (III, 235).

Droṇa,¹ the preceptor of the Dhārtarāṣṭras and the Pāṇḍavas, Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc., son of Bharadvāja, husband of Kṛpī, and father of Aśvatthāman. § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 138, 1186, 1194, 1196, 1199 (Ādṛyam), 1201.—§ 9 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 300.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 537.—§ 83 (Ādivaṃcāvatāraṇa): I, 63, 2436 (father of Aśvatthāman), 2438 (Dhṛṣṭadyumna was born for the destruction of D.).—§ 130 (Amcāvat.): I, 67, 2705 (Bhāradvāja, born from a portion of Brhaspati), 2707 (Dhanurvedo Vedo ca yaṃ taṃ Vedavido viduḥ varishṭham).—§ 199 (Sambhava): Bhishma prevailed upon D. to accept the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas as his pupils in the Dhanurveda: I, 130, 5096 (Bhāradvāja).—§ 200 (do.): Janamejaya said: "Tell me about the birth of Droṇa and of his son Aśvatthāman." Vaiṣampāyana said: The ṛshi Bharadvāja who dwelt at Gaṅgādvara one day saw the Apsaras Ghṛtācī coming from her bath; then his seed came out, but was preserved by him in a vessel (droṇa); from that seed sprang D., who studied the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. Bharadvāja had taught Agniveṇa the use of the Āgneya weapon, and the muni who had sprung from Fire (i.e. Agniveṇa) now taught it to D.: I, 130, 5100, 5106.—§ 201 (do.): D. was a friend of Drupada (q.v.). Droṇa remained in the hermitage of his father and practised austerities. With Kṛpī Charadvati he had the son Aśvatthāman (b). D. studied the Dhanurveda. About this time Rāma Jāmadagnya desired to distribute his wealth among the brahmins, and Droṇa (of the race of Angiras, v. 5122) with his disciples set out for the mountain Mahendra to have his share in the wealth and learn from Rāma the Dhanurveda, the use of celestial weapons, and the nitiśāstra. When he arrived, Rāma had already given his wealth to the brahmins and the earth to Kaśyapa; he then asked D. to choose either his body or his weapons. Droṇa accepted the weapons and the Dhanurveda, and then repaired to Drupada: I, 130, 5110, 5114, 5122, 5124, 5130, (5131).—§ 202 (do.): As Drupada rebuked him for calling him his friend, D., filled with wrath, went to Hāstinapura, where he for some time lived privately in the house of Kṛpa (his brother-in-law), while Aśvatthāman, being unknown, taught the Pārthas (i.e. the Pāṇḍavas) the use of arms. One day, when D. had by means of blades of grass, which were consecrated by mantras, recovered a ball which the princes had lost in a well, and, by means of an arrow, his ring which he had thrown into the well, he was called to Bhishma, whom he told that he had applied to Drupada in order to obtain milk for Aśvatthāman (b), but had been rebuked by him. Bhishma asked D. to make the princes accomplished in arms: I, 131, 5136, 5155, 5158, (5160), 5162, 5164, 5167, (5168), 5170, 5171, (5172), 5177, 5188.—§ 203 (do.): Bhishma presented D. with a pretty house, etc., and gave the Dhārtarāṣṭras and the Pāṇḍavas to him as his pupils. Arjuna (b) became the foremost of D.'s pupils, even superior to Aśvatthāman (c). Also the Vṛshnis and the Andhakas and princes from various countries became his pupils. Even Karna came to learn the Dhanurveda; he, supported by Duryodhana, frequently defied Arjuna: I, 132, 5211, 5214, (5216), 5219, 5220, 5223, 5225, 5228, 5230, 5231, 5236, (5237), 5238, 5239.—§ 204 (Ekalavya): I, 132, 5241, 5243, 5246, 5255 (Ṛṣishyam, i.e. Ekalavya), 5256, 5260, 5262, 5263, 5264, 5266, 5269 (D. asked the thumb of the right hand of Ekalavya as his tutorial fee, in order that Ekalavya might not surpass the Pāṇḍavas).—§ 205 (Sambhava): The foremost pupils of Droṇa were Duryodhana, Bhīmasena, Aśvatthāman (b), Nakula (c) and Sahadeva (c), Yudhishtira (d), and Arjuna (e). The Dhārtarāṣṭras became very jealous of Bhīma and Arjuna: I, 132, 5270.—§ 206 (do.): One day D. caused an artificial bird to be placed on the top of a tree, and first repeatedly asked Yudhishtira, when he stood aiming at the bird, what he did see. He answered that he saw the tree, D., his brothers, and the bird. D. reproachingly told him to stand apart. Then D. repeated the experiment with his other pupils with the same result (I, 132). At last Arjuna's turn came; he said first that he saw only the vulture, and then that he saw only its head, and when D. gave the order he struck off the head of the bird with his shaft: I, 132, 5276, (5278), 5282, (5284), 5286; 133, 5289, 5292, 5293, 5294, 5296.—§ 207 (do.): Arjuna rescued the life of D. by shooting with five arrows an alligator in the Gaṅga, which had seized the thigh of D. D. gave Arjuna the weapon Brahmacīras on condition that he should not use it against a human foe, as it might consume the whole universe (I, 133): I, 133, 5300, 5303.—§ 208 (Astradarṣana): I, 134, 5312; 135, (5350), 5352, 5376; 136, 5384, 5390, 5399; 137, 5433, 5439 (the disciples of D. displayed their prowess in the use of arms).—§ 209 (Drupadaśāna): I, 138, 5445, 5447, 5454, 5466, 5502, 5503, 5511, 5513, 5515, 5516 (assisted by his pupils, D. vanquished Drupada, but restored the half of his kingdom to him, and thenceforth he himself ruled the other half, residing in Ahicchatra).—§ 210a (Arjuna): I, 139, 5523, 5524, 5529, 5533 (D. had obtained the Brahmacīras from Agniveṇa and given it to Arjuna (cf. § 207); Arjuna promised to fight with D. [in the great battle]).—§ 213 (Jatugṛhap.): I, 142, 5688, 5691, 5692; 143, 5707; 145, 5735; 150, 5860.—§ 216 (Caitrarathap.): I, 166, 6326 (preceptor of Dhṛṣṭadyumna).—§ 217 (do.): I, 166, 6332, 6334, 6335, 6336, (6338), 6339, 6340, 6345, 6347, 6349, (6350), 6352, 6354 (repetition of the history of D. from his birth to the division of Drupada's kingdom, cf. §§ 200–9).—§ 218 (Draupadī-sambhava): I, 167, 6358, 6359, 6366, 6377, 6378, 6380, 6385 (Āntakam), 6386, 6397 (Āvadhaya), 6409 (Drupada performed a sacrifice in order to obtain a son who might slay D.; then Dhṛṣṭadyumna arose from the fire. D. became his preceptor).—§ 221 (Caitrarathap.): I, 170, 6465 (had learnt the use of the Āgneya weapon from Agniveṇa, and again taught it to Arjuna).—§ 231 (Svayamvarap.): I, 184, 6932 (Dhṛṣṭadyumnasya . . . Dṛṣṭroḥ).—§ 234 (do.): I, 190, 7115.—§ 241 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 202, 7439; 204, (7460).—§ 243 (do.): I, 204, (7485); 205, 7490; 206, 7518 (rahiḥ), 7536 (Bhāradvāja).—§ 244 (Rājyalābhap.): I, 207, 7557.—§ 286 (Rājasūyikap.): II, 33, 1259.—§ 287 (do.): II, 34, 1267 (came to the rājasūya of Yudhishtira).—§ 288 (do.): II, 35, 1287, 1291.—§ 289 (Arghāharanap.): II, 37, 1345.—§ 290 (Çiçupālavadhap.): II, 44a, 1530, 1532 (śya hi samam yuddhe na paçyāmi narādhipam).—§ 292 (Rājasūyikap.): II, 45a, 1608 (Sahadeva accompanied D. and his son).—§ 294 (Dyūtap.): II, 48, 1712 (saha putrena, [Droṇābhishekaparvan] ("the section relating to the inauguration of Droṇa," the 71st of the minor parvans of Mbhhr.; cf. Droṇābhishecana). § 589: Janamejaya enquired of the state of Dhṛtarāṣṭra on the receipt of intelligence of Bhishma's death. Vaiçampāyana's answer: Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya about what the Kauravas did after the fall of Bhishma. Sañjaya mentioned the arrow-pillow, etc. (cf. § 587 foll.), and that the warriors once more went to battle. The Kurus desired to make Karna their generalissimo (mentioning his enmity with Bhishma) (VII, 1). Karna eulogised Bhishma, and promised to be their leader, mentioning the prowess of Yudhishtira, etc. (α); he commanded his charioteer to make his chariot ready (VII, 2). Karna waited upon Bhishma (mentioning the danger to the Kurus from Arjuna with the Gāṇḍīva, etc.; Arjuna's battle with Çiva; Kṛṣṇa; Bhishma's battle with Rāma) (VII, 3). Bhishma, mentioning Karna's prowess against the Kāmbojas, etc. (β), urged him to fight for the victory of Duryodhana. Then Karna saluted Bhishma, and, at his return, was worshipped by Duryodhana and the Kauravas (VII, 4). Duryodhana asked Karna's advice as to who should become the generalissimo of the Kuru army. Karna proposed Droṇa (VII, 5). Duryodhana requested Droṇa to take the command (VII, 6). Droṇa, mentioning his knowledge of the Veda and the Çaiva weapon, etc., and his inability to slay Dhṛṣṭadyumna, accepted the request. Duryodhana and the kings performed the inauguration of Droṇa, at which the army rejoiced. Droṇa arrayed the troops: the Sindhu king, etc. (γ), in the right wing, supported by Çukuni, etc.; Kṛpa, etc. (δ), in the left wing, supported by the Kāmbojas, etc. (ε); the Madras, etc. (ζ), in the rear; Karna at the head of all the bowmen. The array was in the form of a çakata (cart). Yudhishtira disposed his troops in the form of a krauñca (crane), with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna at the head. Omens appeared when Droṇa proceeded to battle. The Pāṇḍavas and Śrīñjayas were broken by Droṇa. Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Droṇa (VII, 7). Yudhishtira urged Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Arjuna to check Droṇa. The Kekaya princes, etc. (η), "achieved diverse feats." Droṇa put the Pāṇḍava troops to rout. Droṇa & the Kekaya princes, etc. (θ). At last Droṇa, having slain more than two akshauhini, "proceeded hence to heaven" ("attained to the highest state") slain by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. D., P., etc., beheld him (VII, 8). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya the particulars of Droṇa's heroism and slaughter (mentioning his knowledge of the Vedas; his ability to remove Meru; his equality to Brhaspati or Uçanas; his horses of the Sindhu breed, etc. (ι)) (VII, 9). Dhṛtarāṣṭra swooned away, and was restored to consciousness by the Bharata ladies. Then he enquired of Sañjaya about Yudhishtira, etc. (κ), especially Yuyudhana Sātyaki (b), and Dhṛṣṭaketu (c), and Ketumat (d); and the children of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Kshatranjaya, etc. (λ), who, giving up all sports for twelve years, and observing excellent vows, waited upon Bhishma for the sake of weapons; and the five Kaikeya brothers (e); and Yuyutsu (f), and Dhṛṣṭadyumna (g) (VII, 10). Dhṛtarāṣṭra recited the feats of Kṛṣṇa: the killing of Hayaṛāja, etc. (μ), that he had vanquished in battle the Angas, etc. (ν), and that if Kṛṣṇa would summon them, Gada, etc. (ξ), would take up their position in the Pāṇḍava host; and regretted that Duryodhana did not know Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna; the destruction of the Kurus he attributed to himself or to Destiny (VII, 11).—§ 590: Sañjaya begins his narrative in detail. THE ELEVENTH DAY'S BATTLE: Duryodhana, having consulted with Karna and Duḥçāana, etc., asked Droṇa to seize Yudhishtira alive. Droṇa became very glad because Duryodhana had not asked him to slay Yudhishtira. Duryodhana explained that if Yudhishtira were slain, the other Pāṇḍavas, who were invincible, would avenge him; but taken alive, he might be once more vanquished at dice, and so all the Pāṇḍavas be obliged once more to go to the woods. Droṇa said that he would seize Yudhishtira if not protected by Arjuna (with his weapons from Indra and Rudra, etc.); Arjuna, therefore, must be withdrawn from Yudhishtira. Duryodhana proclaimed the promise of Droṇa to all his troops, in order to make him stick to his promise (VII, 12). Yudhishtira learned through his spies that Droṇa had promised to seize him, and addressed his brothers and allies; Arjuna consoled him. A fierce battle commenced. Protected by Droṇa and Arjuna, both hosts seemed to stand inactive. The Pāṇḍavas could not withstand Droṇa, who began to consume the division of Dhṛṣṭadyumna (VII, 13). Droṇa caused a river of blood to flow there. Yudhisṭhira & Droṇa; Çakuni & Sahadeva; Droṇa & Dhṛṣṭadyumna; Bhīmasena & Vīṃçali; Çalya & Nakula; Dhṛṣṭaketu & Kṛpa; Sūtyaki & Kṛtarman; Senāpati & Sucarman; Virāṭa (with the Matsyas) & Karna; Drupada & Bhagadatta; Bhūriçravan & Çikhandin; Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha; Cekitāna & Anuvinda; Lakshmana & Kshatradeva; Paurava & Abhimanyu; Paurava was rescued by Kṛtarman, and then by Jayadratha; Abhimanyu (letting Paurava alone) & Jayadratha, who was vanquished; Çalya & Abhimanyu; Virāṭa, etc. (a), praised Abhimanyu; Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons + Çalya & Abhimanyu (VII, 14); Bhīmasena + Abhimanyu & Çalya; Bhīmasena (causing Abhimanyu to stand aside) & Çalya; both fell down; Kṛtarman took Çalya away on his chariot; the Pāṇḍavas vanquished the Dhṛtarāṣṭras (VII, 15). Karna's son Vṛshasena attacked the Pāṇḍava army; Nakula's son Çatinika & Vṛshasena; the Draupadeyā & the Pāṇḍavas & Vṛshasena + Açvatthāman, etc.; especially Bhīma, etc. (β). The Kuru army was broken. Droṇa & Yudhisṭhira; the Pāṇḍula prince Kumara (the protector of Yudhisṭhira's car-wheels) & Droṇa; Droṇa & Çikhandin, etc. (γ); Droṇa caused Yugandhara to fall down from the seat of his chariot; Virāṭa, etc. (δ), & Droṇa; Vyāghradatta (the Pāṇḍula prince) & Droṇa; Simhasena & Droṇa, who slew both Simhasena and Vyāghradatta; Arjuna, in order to rescue Yudhisṭhira, attacked Droṇa's division. Just then the sun set. Droṇa and Duryodhana, etc., withdrew their troops, and so did Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ε), praised Arjuna (VII, 16).

Dronavadha ("the slaughter of Droṇa"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 345 (°aḥ parva, i.e. Dronavadhaparvan).

[Dronavadhaparvan] ("the section including the slaughter of Droṇa," the 77th of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. Dronavadha). § 601: CONTINUATION OF THE NIGHT AFTER THE FOURTEENTH DAY: According to the words of Vyāsa, Yudhisṭhira refrained from himself seeking to slay Karna, but was filled with grief and anger because Karna had slain Ghaṭotkaca. Beholding the Kurus held in check by Bhīma, he told Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (a), to attack Droṇa, who received them; Duryodhana, etc., came to Droṇa's rescue; a fierce battle ensued between the two hosts; both armies became sorely afflicted with fatigue and blind with sleep. Arjuna granted permission to the warriors to sleep. D., R., and the soldiers applauded Arjuna; the Kurus asked Karna and Duryodhana to abstain from the fight; all the combatants laid themselves down on the field to sleep (description); the Kaurava troops blessed Arjuna for his act of kindness. When the moon rose, both hosts, rising from sleep, again prepared for battle (VII, 184). Duryodhana taxed Droṇa wrathfully for his kindness to the Pāṇḍavas (β); Droṇa in wrath promised to slay all the Pāṇḍulas, and described the measure of Arjuna's might and prowess (γ). Duryodhana vowed that he, etc. (δ), that very day would slay Arjuna, dividing the Bharata host into two divisions. Droṇa ridiculed Duryodhana (ε), saying that it was only right that Duryodhana or Çakuni, who were the root of the hostility, should proceed against Arjuna, instead of causing all the unoffending Kshatriyas to be slain, and that he should accomplish his boasting vow before Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and that he and Karna and Duhçāsana would slay the Pāṇḍavas; moreover, he had done all in life that one should do. The army then was divided into two bodies, and the battle commenced (VII, 185).—§ 602: THE FIFTEENTH DAY: When three-quarters of that night had worn away, the battle once more commenced. At sunrise both hosts, alighting from their chariots, etc., uttered the prayers of the twilight. After the Kuru army had been divided into two bodies, Droṇa, with Duryodhana before him, proceeded against the Somakas, the Pāṇḍavas, and the Pāṇḍulas. Urged by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna moved to the left of Droṇa and Karna. Bhīma urged Arjuna to put forth all his vigour. Arjuna & Droṇa & Karna, etc. (ζ) (description). Droṇa moved away towards the north; the Pāṇḍava troops began to tremble; the Pāṇḍulas & Droṇa; Drupada and Virāṭa + the three grandsons of Drupada + the Cedis & Droṇa, who slew the three grandsons of Drupada, vanquished the Cedis, etc. (η), and slew Drupada and Virāṭa. Dhṛṣṭadyumna swore to slay Droṇa that very day; Drupada with his division (from one side) + Arjuna (from another side) & Droṇa + Duryodhana, etc. (θ); Bhīma urged Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and they both attacked Droṇa's division (description); soon the morning sun arose (VII, 186). The warriors adored the Sun, as he rose, and the battle once more commenced (description); neither Karna, etc. (ι), could be seen for dust. Duryodhana, etc. (k), engaged in battle with four of the Pāṇḍava warriors: Duryodhana + his brothers & Nakula and Sahadeva; Karna & Bhīma; Drona & Arjuna; Nakula was worsted by Duryodhana (VII, 187); Sahadeva slew Duhśāsana's driver; Duhśāsana was worsted by Sahadeva; Bhīma jumped into the chariot of Nakula; Drona invoked the Aindra, etc. (λ), weapons; D., G., R., Si., Aps., Y., and Rā. applauded Drona and Arjuna, saying that "this is no human, etc. (μ), but a high Brahma encounter"; both employed the Brahma weapon; the engagement became general (VII, 188). Duhśāsana & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who vanquished him and proceeded against Drona. Kṛtavarman + three of his brothers & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna + Nakula and Sahadeva, who checked them (enumeration of unfair weapons that were not used); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna proceeded towards Drona. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna + Sātyaki & Drona + Duryodhana (who grieved on account of his former friendship with Sātyaki); Duryodhana was worsted by Sātyaki; Karna rushed to the rescue of Duryodhana; Bhīma rushed towards Karna. Yudhishtira urged his warriors to rush to the rescue of Sātyaki, Bhīma, and the twins; Arjuna attacked the Kurus, and Drona attacked the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 189). Drona caused a great carnage among the Pāṇḍavas; the Pāṇḍavas and *Sr̥ṅjaya*s & Drona; the Pāṇḍavas feared, thinking that Arjuna would not fight with Drona. Kṛṣṇa told Arjuna to abandon virtue and let some man tell Drona that Açvatthāman had been slain in battle. Arjuna did not approve of it; others approved of it, but Yudhishtira with great difficulty. Bhīma slew with a mace an elephant named Açvatthāman belonging to the Mālava chief Indravarma, and exclaimed before Drona: "Açvatthāman has been slain." Drona did not believe Bhīma, but attacked Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and slew the Pāṇḍavas (and Somakas) with the Brahma weapon, and cut off the head of Vasudāna, and slew 500 Matasyas, etc. The R. Viçvāmitra, etc., etc. (ν), appeared in the welkin and reproved Drona for using the Brahma weapon against persons not acquainted with it, and called upon Drona to lay aside his weapons and leave the earth soon. Drona asked Yudhishtira whether the report about Açvatthāman's death was true; Kṛṣṇa urged Yudhishtira to save his army by an untruth; Bhīma urged him to do the same; Yudhishtira distinctly said that Açvatthāman was dead, adding indistinctly the word "elephant"; before this Yudhishtira's chariot had stayed at a height of four fingers' breadth from the surface of the earth; after this untruth his animals touched the earth. Drona became quite dejected, also after the words of the R., and beholding Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna before him, could not fight as before (VII, 190). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Drona; the celestial weapons no longer appeared at Drona's bidding; his weapons, that had not been exhausted for four days and one night, now became exhausted on the third part of the fifth day. Drona took up another celestial bow which Angiras had given him; a fierce encounter took place between Drona and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; none else had arrows of that kind that Drona used in close fight except Kṛpa, etc. (ξ); Sātyaki rescued Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and was applauded by Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, and the Si., etc. (VII, 191). Duryodhana, Karna, and Kṛpa + Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons & Sātyaki + Yudhishtira, etc. (o); Yudhishtira urged his troops against Drona (in order to aid Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna), who again used the Brahma weapon; Bhīma took up Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna on his own chariot, and urged him to slay Drona quickly; both Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and Drona invoked the Brahma weapon, etc.; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna began to slay the Vaçṭis, etc. (π); Bhīma again reminded Drona of Açvatthāman's death, calling upon Karna, Kṛpa, and Duryodhana to exert carefully in battle. Drona laid his weapons aside, devoted himself to yoga, and proceeded to heaven (Brahmaloka) in the company of the foremost of R., in a blaze of light, that only Saṅjaya, etc. (ρ), saw; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna cut off Drona's head—though forbidden by Arjuna and blamed by everybody—and threw it down amongst the Kurus, who ran away in all directions, except Açvatthāman. Saṅjaya, through the grace of Vyāsa, beheld Drona's proceeding after he had ascended the sky. The Kurus, the Pāṇḍavas, and the *Sr̥ṅjaya*s all became dejected and ran away; Bhīmasena and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna embraced each other, Bhīmasena expecting the slaughter of Karna and Duryodhana (VII, 192).

[Drupadaçāsana(m)] ("the chastising of Drupada").

§ 209 (Sambhavadhap.): Droṇa now one day asked the Dhṛtarāshṭras and Pāṇḍavas for his fee as their instructor, saying: "Seize ye the Pāñcāla king Drupada in battle and bring him to me." Duryodhana, Karṇa, Yuyutsu, Duḥçāsana, Vikarna, Jalasandha, Sulocana, Subāhu, Dirghalocana, etc., smote the Pāñcālas and conquered the capital of Drupada, while Arjuna, etc., waited outside the town at a distance of half a kroça, thinking that the others were not able to seize Drupada. Defeated by Drupada, they fell back upon the Pāṇḍavas. Arjuna, bidding Yudhisṭhira not to engage in the fight, appointed the sons of Mādri his oakrakshas, while Bhīmasena, mace in hand, ran ahead to slay the elephants, while Arjuna attacked the Pāñcālas and Śrījāyas and felled Drupada from his elephant. Drupada and Satyajit rushed at Arjuna. Satyajit had his bows repeatedly cut in twain and his horses, etc., slain, and desisted from the fight.

Drupada also had his bow cut in twain, etc., by Arjuna, who then took a scimitar and, leaping from his own chariot upon that of his foe, seized Drupada, while the Pāñcālas ran away. Bhīma, etc., began to lay waste his capital, but were prevented by Arjuna. Droṇa prevailed upon Drupada to accept his friendship, and restored half his kingdom to him, viz., that part of it that lay on the southern side of the Bhāgtrathi, with the southern Pāñcālas, up to the banks of the Carmanvati river, where Drupada thenceforth resided sorrowfully in Kāmpilya in Mākandī, on the banks of Gaṅgā, while Droṇa (because Drupada had said that only a king could be the friend of a king) retained that half that lay to the north of the Bhāgtrathi, and thenceforth continued to reside in Ahicchatra (I, 138).
